Barber Shop Chronicles
A Fuel, National Theatre, and West Yorkshire Playhouse co-production
by Inua Ellams; Directed by Bijan Sheibani; Designed by Rae Smith

One day. Six cities. A thousand stories. For generations, African men have gathered in barbershops to discuss the world. This dynamic new play leaps between barbershops in London, Johannesburg, Harare, Kampala, Lagos, and Accra. The banter can be barbed, and the truth is always telling.

The Routes of Slavery: Memories of Slavery (1444–1888)
Jordi Savall
Directed by Jordi Savall

More than two dozen musicians from 15 countries on three continents unite in this reverent and uplifting celebration of the influence of enslaved Africans on the culture of the Americas and Europe. Sponsored by UNESCO, this massive cross-cultural musical reconciliation serves as an extraordinary tribute to the resilience of the human spirit.

Big Dance Theater
17c
Conceived and directed by Annie-B Parson
Co-directed by Paul Lazar
Choreographed by Annie-B Parson and the company

Obie Award-winning Big Dance Theater’s latest effort is a portrait of Samuel Pepys, the outlandish 17th-century politician whose obsessive, tell-all diaries are a startling precursor to our own social media culture. The ensemble weaves music, dance, video, and text in an exploration of the moral murkiness of Pepys’ legacy as statesman and notorious philanderer, juxtaposing his own writings with the radical feminism of his contemporary, the playwright Margaret Cavendish.

“Deeply brilliant... an amazing company... See the work of Annie-B Larson and Paul Lazar whenever possible.”

American Conservatory Theater, San Francisco’s Tony Award-winning nonprofit theater, nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training, and ongoing engagement with our community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Pam MacKinnon and Executive Director Jennifer Bielstein, we embrace our responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent our rich theatrical traditions and literatures, while exploring new artistic forms and communities. Founded by William Ball, a pioneer of the regional theater movement, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season in 1967. We have since performed more than 250 productions to a combined audience of more than seven million people. Every year we reach more than 250,000 people through our productions and programs.

Rising from the wreckage of the earthquake and fire of 1906 and hailed as the “perfect playhouse,” the beautiful, historic Geary Theater has been our home since the beginning. When the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake ripped the roof apart, San Franciscans rallied together to raise a record-breaking $30 million to rebuild the theater. The Geary reopened in 1996 with a production of The Tempest directed by Carey Perloff, who took over as A.C.T.’s third artistic director in 1992 after the retirement of gentleman artist Edward Hastings.

Perloff’s 25-season tenure was marked by groundbreaking productions and translations of classical works; cross-disciplinary performances and international collaborations; and theater made by, for, and about the Bay Area. These traditions of exploring powerful stories by celebrated artists and introducing audiences to extraordinary emerging voices in American theater continue under A.C.T.’s current artistic director, Pam MacKinnon, who took the helm in July 2018.

A.C.T.’s 50-year-old Conservatory, led by Melissa Smith, is at the center of our work. Our three-year, fully accredited Master of Fine Arts Program is at the forefront of America’s actor training programs. Meanwhile, our intensive Summer Training Congress attracts students from around the world, and the San Francisco Semester offers a unique study-abroad opportunity for undergraduates. Other programs include Studio A.C.T.—our expansive course of theater study for adults—and the Professional Development Training Program, which offers actor training for companies seeking to elevate their employees’ business performance skills. Our alumni often grace our mainstage and perform across the Bay Area, as well as on stages and screens across the country.

A.C.T. also brings the benefits of theater-based arts education to more than 17,000 Bay Area students and educators each year. Director of Education & Community Programs Elizabeth Brodersen oversees the world-famous Young Conservatory (for students ages 8 to 19) and our ACTsmart education programs, including the Student Matinee (SMAT) program that has brought hundreds of thousands of young people to A.C.T. performances since 1968. We also provide touring Will on Wheels Shakespeare productions, teaching-artist residencies, in-school workshops, and study materials to Bay Area schools and community-based organizations.

With the appointment of Artistic Director Pam MacKinnon and Executive Director Jennifer Bielstein, our continuing commitment to the development of new work and new artists, and A.C.T.’s increased presence in the Central Market neighborhood with The Strand and The Costume Shop theaters, A.C.T. plays a leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco and the nation.

Men on Boats

“Men on Boats is off-the-canyon-walls funny!”

Chicago Tribune

Steady! Oars up! Oars out! Pack your gear for a non-stop adventure along America’s iconic Green and Colorado rivers. Join one-armed 19th-century explorer John Wesley Powell and his band of brawny Civil War vets, trappers, and mountain men as they “discover” and chart the Grand Canyon.

Inspired by Powell’s actual travel log from 1869, this subversive tale of ten men, four boats, and two rivers contains none of the above. Spinning historical, theatrical, and gender conventions on their heads, playwright Jaclyn Backhaus’s nimble and ingenious script is provocative, laugh-out-loud theater, performed by a diverse cast of female-identifying actors who infuse America’s historic myths of male conquest with a sly blast of subtext.

Welcome to A.C.T.,

When I was 24, I spent a summer in Madrid researching for my PhD dissertation in comparative politics. I was interested in how the organizational memory and structures of trade unions—illegal under authoritarianism—helped political parties reemerge after the death of General Franco. Shortly after that summer, after much soul-searching, I dropped out of graduate school, in large part because I realized that I wasn’t interested in the answerable questions of political science. The questions I was interested in were messy and big—questions for theater.

Today’s playwright, Lynn Nottage, knows all about messy and big questions. In 2011, she asked herself, how could so many Americans suddenly be living below the poverty line? She came across a New York Times article about Reading, Pennsylvania, a small city that had been a prosperous railroad hub and factory town, but suddenly had a poverty rate of 41 percent. How? Why?

Over many months, Lynn went to Reading and listened to people in job training centers, City Hall, and support groups. She amplified the stories she heard, and gradually, in collaboration with other theater-makers and arts organizations, she wrote Sweat. Her play focuses on a group of loyal friends and family, who work hard, play hard, and love hard. It’s about what happens when economic insecurity blossoms into fear and shatters a community. It’s about the precariousness of the American Dream.

Johanna Day, a dear friend and actor who originated the role of Tracey, told me that a woman from Reading came to a performance of Sweat on Broadway. Through tears afterward, she said that she was happy that her town was now no longer a punchline or a Monopoly property, but a play. Her town had been heard.

While I never wrote my PhD dissertation, Lynn Nottage has written a play that I believe will be produced 50 years from now. I am very excited for A.C.T.’s production, helmed by the wonderful Loretta Greco, on loan from the Magic Theatre. I have known Loretta for 20 years. She is now one of my guides into artistic director-ing in the Bay Area. Her smarts and heart are a perfect fit for this messy and big American story.

Thank you for coming to The Geary and for supporting A.C.T. in my inaugural season. Get ready for Sweat. Enjoy the show!

Pam MacKinnon
Artistic Director

Dear Friends,

What a remarkable time to be joining A.C.T.

As I step into the role of executive director this fall and take in the breadth of work this organization charges itself with creating month after month, it is exhilarating to be a part of it all. My lure to San Francisco and A.C.T. lies not just in becoming part of this incredible family of artists, artisans, students, educators, and staff—but also in the opportunity to sit alongside you and be among a community of theatergoers and supporters who thrive on live storytelling.

In the weeks surrounding the opening of Sweat, A.C.T. will launch a new session of more than two dozen classes—ranging from clowning to playwriting to beginning acting—as part of our Studio A.C.T. program; rehearse Jaclyn Backhaus’s hysterical and game-changing Men on Boats for its October 17 opening at The Strand Theater; welcome artists from as far away as Australia, Asia, and Europe for our revolutionary study-abroad program, the San Francisco Semester; engage and train young actors through the acclaimed Young Conservatory, including those preparing for the premiere of Hookman, the existential comedy thriller from San Francisco’s Lauren Yee (whose basketball drama The Great Leap will be seen at The Geary in March); transform the lives of young adults and children, for whom theater has not been readily available, through our dynamic Education & Community Programs; engage an array of leading business professionals to explore how actor training can transform work-group dynamics and improve live-presentation delivery through our Professional Development series; mentor emerging theater pre-professionals in our career-building Fellowship Program; and welcome back 37 students to the internationally recognized, three-year Master of Fine Arts Program. Yes, all of this is happening at A.C.T. right now.

None of these would exist if there wasn’t an audience and community to support and engage these incredible programs and productions. Your thirst for theater and this truly great institution was significant in my decision to come to A.C.T. My career has been dedicated to furthering opportunity for all communities to experience theater, because—like you—I’m a fan. I look forward to meeting you, and sharing with you all that A.C.T. has to offer. Thank you for welcoming me to your home.

RETHINKING IDENTITY

AN INTERVIEW WITH PLAYWRIGHT LYNN NOTTAGE
BY SIMON HODGSON

Playwright Lynn Nottage has always raised up the voices of the forgotten, the unsung, and the marginalized. Years before winning her second Pulitzer Prize for Sweat (her first Pulitzer was for the searing Ruined in 2008), she worked for Amnesty International. We spoke with Nottage about the common threads of her storytelling, her connection with steelworkers, and the months she spent researching Sweat in Reading, Pennsylvania.

Which voices really resonated when you went to Reading? What stood out in Reading was not the individual stories but the collective story. These were, by and large, middle-aged white guys who had invested in the American Dream and had assumed they would work in their jobs until they were ready to retire, and have these fabulous pensions and health plans. They were broadsided when they woke up one morning to be told, “The life that you knew is no longer going to exist.” It forced them to rethink their identity and their relationship to the Horatio Alger myth [that hard work leads from rags to riches].

Your plays’ settings range from a 21st-century steel town to 18th-century Paris to 1930s Hollywood. What links your storytelling? They’re all stories about people who are marginalized. People who are struggling with identity. People whose identities have been erased. They’re about working people who feel incredibly marginalized and unseen, and about how they can assert themselves in a landscape that refuses to recognize their dignity.

“THEY’RE ALL STORIES ABOUT PEOPLE WHO ARE MARGINALIZED. PEOPLE WHO ARE STRUGGLING WITH IDENTITY.”

Like how Cynthia, Jessie, and Tracey assert themselves in the male-dominated landscape of the steel industry. There is this misunderstanding culturally that only men are steelworkers. There are a lot of women who are working in the steel industry. They may not be on the floor of the foundry but particularly in metal tubing plants, they’re packing tubes and they’re in other roles. I felt it was really important to show the full range of life on the floor.

What inspires this focus on working people? Growing up in a family of working people. Those are the stories that are close to home. My mom was a schoolteacher, my dad was a social worker, and I’m a worker myself. Someone asked me about my relationship to the steelworkers, and I said, “No one understands insecurity more than artists; we are always right there on the edge of insolvency.”

Sweat premiered at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival in the pre-election year of 2015. Did you notice any difference in audience reactions after the 2016 election? I’ve only seen it in Oregon, New York, and Washington, DC. When we did it at OSF, the stagehands were in the midst of a strike. So the play certainly had internal resonance. By and large the OSF audience tends to be somewhat removed from the issues discussed in the play because it tends to be more affluent. But they leaned into the story and were open to hearing it. It was before the election and before Trump was even on the landscape.

How about the DC audience? In Washington, DC, I felt the audience was much more resistant to the narrative and a little standoffish, like, “We don’t need to be told this.” But clearly they did! [Laughs] By the time we got to New York, it became abundantly clear that the play was telling a story that needed to be told. What the play did was reflect back what I heard when I did the research—a level of frustration and desperation that our politicians were not listening to.

What do you hope the Geary audience takes away from Sweat? When I was done in Pennsylvania, one of my goals was to bridge a divide and get people to see that we all share one narrative. In Reading, you have people—all suffering in isolation—blaming each other, not recognizing that they share responsibility for the dismantling of the culture. At the end of the play, I didn’t want to draw any conclusions. I don’t think of myself as a moralizing playwright who wants the audience to leave with a specific lesson. What I do hope is that at the end, the audience will go off to some bar and enter into a robust conversation about the issues raised.
Geology was destiny for 19th-century Pennsylvania. In the 1860s, when the process of making steel out of iron ore, coal, and limestone was refined, the state had all of the raw materials necessary for the production of steel at scale. Combining minerals, river transport links, manufacturing experience, and access to investment from Pittsburgh financiers, the Keystone State was poised to create a material that was strong, durable, and versatile: the metal of the future.

As the United States rebuilt infrastructure shattered by the Civil War, steel companies across Pennsylvania grew into major national corporations. The greatest of these, U.S. Steel, was formed in 1901 by a merger between three steel companies. Aided by favorable government oversight in the 1920s and fueled by military contracts during World Wars I and II, it became a virtual monopoly. By 1943, the company employed 340,000 people nationwide. One year after World War II ended, America was manufacturing more than half of the world’s steel.

All around the Great Lakes, cities such as Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland, and Milwaukee were prospering thanks to the steel industry. The labor was both physically demanding and dangerous, but for thousands of working-class Americans, including people of color and Polish, Russian, Ukrainian, Slovak, and Hungarian immigrants from Eastern Europe, the well-paid union jobs at the mill represented a path to higher standards of living. For many—such as Chris in Sweat, who followed his mother and grandfather into Olstead’s mill, the rhythms of steel work became a part of family life.
Joining the union was a sign of security for many: it represented health benefits, unemployment pay, and someone to protect steelworkers’ interests. Unions, however, did not favor everyone. The structures and inner workings of unions often kept workers of color in the worst paid and most dangerous jobs. In Sweat, Colombian American Oscar remembers his father sweeping floors for years, hoping for a good job in the steel factory.

Despite some inequity within unions, America’s steel industry was so successful in the first half of the 20th century that, to many of its employees and executives, its dominance seemed inevitable. But the foundations of America’s booming steel industry were rotten. Whereas early steel magnates such as Andrew Carnegie had invested in new technology that reduced the price of steel and increased competitiveness, by the 1950s, America’s steel executives were more interested in keeping profits high than in finding the next technological advance.

This lack of innovation opened the door to international competitors. Postwar steel companies in Germany, Austria, and Japan—desperate to rebuild their countries’ devastated economies—refined the basic oxygen furnace (BOF) process: a technique that resulted in fewer impurities, faster production, and reduced labor costs. Not till the late 1960s did US mills incorporate that technology in their own factories. By then it was too little, too late. By 1980, Japan controlled 16 percent of world steel output; the US share had dropped to 14 percent.

While American steel manufacturers were being overtaken internationally, the hardworking cities of the Great Lakes also confronted major technological shifts across the US, as steel was replaced by new materials such as ceramics, plastics, and aluminum. Using these manufacturing substitutes, American cars became lighter, requiring less steel. Aluminum replaced steel in canned drinks. Canned food was replaced by frozen meals. Lower demand for steel meant reduced prices for mills and fewer jobs for US steelworkers.

America’s declining market share in steel may have looked stark on Wall Street balance sheets, but on Main Street, the picture was worse. As US mills’ competitiveness dwindled, they laid off workers and closed plants. The result was a downturn in manufacturing hubs around the Great Lakes that continues to affect not only steelworkers, but also thousands of auxiliary and steel-related businesses. Schools closed due to lack of funding. Unemployment rose. “You wipe that mill out and you aren’t just wiping out eight or nine hundred jobs,” says former steelworker and Chicago resident Ken Wychocki, “you’re wiping out a whole lot more.”

Not only do many people in the Rust Belt feel stunned at the permanent closure of the mills and the devastation of their communities, but they also feel disenfranchised. No one in the media or the local, state, or federal government seems to be listening to them. They see other industries get bailed out—the auto plants, the banks—and wonder why steel wasn’t saved. “I run the full mile, I put in the time, do the right thing,” says Brucie in Sweat, “But, dude, tell me what I did wrong, huh?”

While the return of the major manufacturing plants to America’s Rust Belt is uncertain, many communities are rebuilding. There are newer “mini-mills”—smaller companies that produce steel by using electricity to superheat scrap metal. An influx of new people—in many instances immigrants from Central and South America—into cities such as Reading have revitalized the communities, bringing the energy of start-ups as well as the tax dollars needed to fund local schools. As the silent mills slowly rust, these former company towns are discovering a new rhythm of life.
When A.C.T.’s new artistic director, Pam MacKinnon, asked Loretta Greco—artistic director of the Magic Theatre—to direct playwright Lynn Nottage’s Sweat, Greco immediately said yes. She had felt the power of the Pulitzer Prize–winning drama when it premiered at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival in 2015, and knew she wanted to explore it further. We sat down with Greco as design plans were being finalized to discover what it is about Nottage’s work that excites her.

Sweat will be your fifth play for the Geary stage. What is it about this space that keeps bringing you back?

The thing about The Geary is there are plays where you want to take advantage of the pomp and circumstance, and then there are plays where you really need the immediacy. The characters in Sweat are a family, and that bar is like those characters’ living room. We want to extend that so the audience feels that they’re in that bar, too.

Scenic designer Andrew Boyce and I also wanted to capture the beauty of Reading. With the glory of The Geary—that depth of field—we can really create the sense of context, of the city moving on through images and video projected on these billboards above the bar.

You’ve directed a number of plays that explore what the American Dream means to people today. What is it that fascinates you about this topic?

I’m interested in class. We so rarely have genuine pieces of work in our culture that deal with the working class, that recognize the beauty and the dignity of what it is to really believe in hard work and your piece of that bigger American Dream.

I’ve directed a lot of [playwright] Sam Shepard, who was interested in the broken promise of the American Dream. He’s at the opposite end of the spectrum from Lynn; Sam wasn’t a researcher, but he viscerally followed the emotional terrain of this country, the promises and the hope that the country was built on. That fascinates me.

Like Sam, Lynn is looking at identity. We’re tied to this promise of, “if you work hard, you’ll be rewarded.” Provisions will be there for you and the next generation will have even more bounty; they will do better. Lynn’s looking at what’s broken, at these beautiful people who feel incredibly disenfranchised, and asking what do we do to regain the dignity of the working class when the one percent is so intent on making the gap wider and wider.

Yet Sweat isn’t trying to provide answers.

I don’t think Lynn is interested in that. She came into Reading with eyes wide open. She learned, listened, and then conjured these characters; she’s asking us not to look away, to keep our eyes wide open and to see what she sees. She leaves us with the work ahead. She’s asking big questions. How do we retain our best selves even when everything around us is falling apart? Can there be hope? I think that’s a fair question right now.

Why do you think that this play will resonate with a Bay Area audience?

In San Francisco, we’re aware that the state of California is looking more and more like the rest of the country will look in 25 years; we understand that it is going to be a majority-minority [minorities will make up the majority of the population] very soon and there is an embracing of that. Our cultural makeup is shifting hugely, quickly, and for the better. So it’s interesting to look at a spot in the US where people didn’t see this coming. They didn’t see what NAFTA was going to do. They didn’t see that the breaking down of the unions was even a possibility. So there is that panic and that tragedy of being bereft both of literal livelihood and of identity.

The Geary audience is always hungry for real stories about social conundrums. They are really gonna dig this play, and I hope that it spurs incredibly deep, rich conversations about what is to be done, where are we headed, and what will happen to this enormous section of our workforce. How are people seen, how is dignity restored? How do we stop being OK with living in a country where so many people are living in poverty? How are we responsible for one another as citizens, as human beings?

Too many people are looking away right now. I hope the power of the play and the humanity of it will allow people to keep their eyes wide open, just as Lynn has, in order to be altered in a way and to think about something anew and their place in what the future’s going to look like.

SPARKING THE CONVERSATION

MEET A.C.T.’S DIRECTOR OF DRAMATURGY AND NEW WORKS JOY MEADS

BY ELSPETH SWEATMAN
For Joy Meads, becoming A.C.T.’s director of dramaturgy and new works is a homecoming. She first discovered the magic of theater at a performance of A Christmas Carol and in Young Conservatory classes. “The YC classes were great for me,” says Meads. “I was an awkward teenager and they gave me confidence. I built a friend group and found my voice.”

It was her experiences in these YC classes that spurred her towards a career in directing and dramaturgy. After graduating from New York University, Meads directed at small theaters in New York and in the Bay Area. She served as the associate artistic director at California Shakespeare Theater, literary manager at Steppenwolf Theatre Company, and literary manager and artistic engagement strategist at Center Theatre Group. She is also a co-founder of The Kilroys, a gang of playwrights and producers described by Backstage magazine as “the superheroines of the theater,” who work to increase the production of plays by female and transgender playwrights. We spoke with Meads about her new position and what she’s looking forward to this season.

What does it mean to be the director of dramaturgy and new works?
I’m the resident dramaturg for our mainstage productions and I teach two classes in the M.F.A. Program. I’m also a core part of the season planning process; I put forward plays that we might want to do—both classical and contemporary—and respond to others’ ideas. I’m really excited about the idea of creating conversations between contemporary playwrights and classic work. Who are the contemporary playwrights who are writing on the epic scale of The Geary, and how are they in conversation with ancient plays?

How do you find and foster those conversations?
I listen to the rhythms of a time and a place. What are the stories that the Bay Area community needs to hear right now in 2018? What conversations are waiting to be unlocked? What is vital right here in this moment to help us understand ourselves as individuals and as a society? Who are the voices that are going to unlock that? I’m reading widely, looking for those playwrights who will write those stories, and working with those artists to develop them. And then I’m thinking, “How do I create the most productive collisions of story and audience? How are our audiences encountering this work, and how am I making that encounter as rich and fruitful as possible?” I couldn’t feel more passionate about this work.

What do you look for in a play?
I’ve read 500 plays a year for 12 years now, so I’m pretty quick at picking up a playwright’s level of craft. But, beyond that, I’m interested in plays that help me encounter the human condition with fresh eyes. I’m looking for plays that use form to express content and engage the audience both intellectually and experientially. I’m looking for plays that are delicious for actors to act: characters who have strong needs, multiple conflicting objectives, and internal and external conflicts.

What are you most excited about this season?
I love this season. It’s an exciting vision of what a regional theater can be: how it can be in conversation with its audience, how it can bring together thrilling emerging voices and brilliant plays from generations past to spark a conversation, all of which speaks to this moment in profound ways. Funnily enough, I just pitched Rhinoceros at my last job, so of course I was delighted to see that Pam programmed it here. It’s disturbingly relevant. Bay Area native Lauren Yee is a playwright who will soon be one of the more important voices in American theater. The Great Leap has deep roots here in San Francisco and brings an under-told story to our stage. Men on Boats is another play I love. Playwright Jaclyn Backhaus is an incredible talent. The creativity of staging that this play asks for is joyful. It asks vital contemporary questions about how we imagine ourselves, where we see leadership, and what it means to lead.
This year, A.C.T.’s Master of Fine Arts Program is serving up classics with a twist. Shakespeare, Sheridan, and Austen are getting a makeover through contemporary translations, commissioned world premieres, and diverse voices—both onstage and off. “I’m excited to dive into shows that have been so beautifully selected,” says third-year student actor Jerrie R. Johnson. “I’m even more excited that so many of our directors—Lavina Jadhwani, Mina Morita, Dawn Monique Williams—are women of color.”

“Our vision for every M.F.A. Program season is to find a mix of classical and contemporary plays that will suit our actors and test their training in acting, movement, voice, and speech,” says Conservatory Director Melissa Smith. For the 12 first-year program actors, the year is all about building their acting toolkit: dialects, movement, scene study. “We focused heavily on settling into ourselves so we are able to bring our entire beings to each character, each performance,” says second-year actor Kimberly Hollkamp.

“The first year of the M.F.A. Program was learning about yourself: your body, your habits, and what’s hindering you as an actor,” says second-year Summer Brown. “In the second year, you hone the mess that you cracked open in your first year and use it in your performances.” This year, Brown and her fellow second-year actors will embrace the intrigue, gossip, and wit of Richard Brinsley Sheridan’s School for Scandal and the physical comedy and verse of Shakespeare’s Midsummer Night’s Dream. These all-new contemporary adaptations, by directors Christine Adaire and Dawn Monique Williams, will put the 13 actors’ comedic and linguistic abilities to the test. “With elevated language, you have to trust that the story is in the text,” says second-year actor Emma Van Lare. “The words have to become part of your being. You try to fully embody the words and use them to drive the story.”

In the spring, the first- and second-year M.F.A. Program actors will join together for Sense and Sensibility—adapted by Kate Hamill (Vanity Fair)—and another production to be announced soon, directed by A.C.T.’s new associate conservatory director, Peter J. Kuo. These productions will test the young actors’ skills at playing multiple characters in a single production.

In the third and final year of the M.F.A. Program, the season takes on a new form and meaning. The 13 actors audition for mainstage productions, perform in A.C.T.’s seasonal favorite A Christmas Carol, and collaborate on a world-premiere production, commissioned for them. This year’s play—Both Your Houses, by Susan Soon He Stanton—is set backstage during the final performance of a regional production of Romeo and Juliet. Exploring the #MeToo movement in theater and the tensions between local and out-of-town artists, the play was also sparked by the student actors’ own experiences. “Our workshop with Susan and director Mina Morita during last year’s New Strands Festival was exciting,” says third-year Adam Donovan. “We would mention an experience we’d had and then it would come out of one of our characters’ mouths the next morning.”

“What excites me most about Both Your Houses is that we’re being invited to bring together everything we have learned in our time at A.C.T. and say, ‘This is who I am as an artist. This is what I value, this is what makes me different,’” says third-year actor Caleb Lewis. “M.F.A. Program productions are the spaces in which the transition from ‘student’ to ‘actor’ takes place. I can’t wait to explore.”
“THE FIRST YEAR OF THE M.F.A. PROGRAM WAS LEARNING ABOUT YOURSELF: YOUR BODY, YOUR HABITS, AND WHAT’S HINDERING YOU AS AN ACTOR. IN THE SECOND YEAR, YOU HONE THE MESS THAT YOU CRACKED OPEN AND USE IT IN YOUR PERFORMANCES.”

Another show to be announced soon!

Join us for a special celebration welcoming new Artistic Director Pam MacKinnon and new Executive Director Jennifer Bielstein to San Francisco!

Tastemaker, provocateur, award-winning designer, and A.C.T. Board Member Ken Fulk couldn’t let the arrival of A.C.T.’s powerhouse leadership team, Artistic Director Pam MacKinnon and Executive Director Jennifer Bielstein, just happen. So the James Beard Award nominee—whose iconic style is behind famed San Francisco hotspots The Battery and Leo’s Oyster Bar—invited A.C.T. to christen the St. Joseph’s Arts Society, his latest destination, with a Fall Celebration to welcome our two new SF residents. This one-night-only event to open the restored 1913 landmark building—in disrepair since the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake—is shaping up to be the party of the season.

Joining Fulk as event chairs are fellow A.C.T. trustees Robina Riccitiello and Jeff and Laurie Ubben. Serving as honorary chairs are Uma Thurman and Josh Lucas, who both made their Broadway debuts in MacKinnon’s recent hit, The Parisian Woman. They are joined by Lt. Governor Gavin Newsom and Jennifer Siebel Newsom in an honorary capacity and a sizzling Artistic Committee, including Ellen Burstyn, Olympia Dukakis, Bill Irwin, John Lithgow, Kate Mulgrew, David Strathairn, and BD Wong.

“Laurie and I are excited to welcome Pam and Jennifer to San Francisco,” says Ubben. “We couldn’t think of a more fun way to do it than at Ken’s latest landmark. It’s an auspicious way to celebrate A.C.T.’s next chapter with this tremendous new leadership team.”

“Ken Fulk is a design icon!” says Riccitiello. “A.C.T.’s Fall Celebration will be the coming-out party for his new space that’s glamorous, distinctive, and sexy, but honors its origins as the old St. Joseph’s Church. He’s orchestrating an evening that will shake up the expectations of the traditional gala-type event, and it’s happening in the city’s hottest new venue.”

The evening will include a gourmet tasting experience with Paula LeDuc, wines provided by DuMOL Winery, and a dance party with live music. Event proceeds support A.C.T.’s artistic, professional training, and Education & Community programs, which benefit more than 250,000 Bay Area residents each year.

So save the date of November 15 and glam up—A.C.T.’s Fall Celebration is going to be the party of the year! For tickets and more information, email Jody Price at jprice@act-sf.org.
A call to action, to most magazine readers and television watchers, is a familiar sales technique—inspiring people to take the next step toward supporting a cause or campaign. But for 45-year-old US Army Reserve officer Anthony Alfidi, the call to action was literal. It came in early 2009, when Alfidi was called up by the US Army for action in Iraq. Before being mobilized for nine months in the Middle East in a military logistics unit, the army officer put his affairs in order. The process prompted him to consider the organizations he valued most, including A.C.T. Alfidi wrote A.C.T. into his will, becoming a member of the Prospero Society—a special group of theater-lovers whose members have committed to support A.C.T. either through a bequest or a living trust. “I’d like my estate to benefit as many people as possible,” he says.

For arts lover Alfidi, adding A.C.T. to his planning was natural. Born and raised in Sacramento, he was inspired by the performing arts he experienced on public television as a child, including the Boston Pops orchestra. After graduating from the University of Notre Dame on a US Army scholarship, he served tours in South Korea, Kuwait, and Germany during the 1990s.

The following decade, he returned to the US, moved to San Francisco for its cultural scene, and became an A.C.T. subscriber and a Geary regular. “Tom Stoppard’s Travesties was a particular highlight,” he says. “A very interesting take on the Dada era with a really creative set design.”

Today, Alfidi is a self-employed financial analyst, enjoying frequent trips to the ballet, opera, and symphony in San Francisco, as well as to A.C.T. He knows, however, that whenever Uncle Sam’s call next comes, he will continue to answer. Last year, he completed an 11-month stint in Afghanistan, where he was an intelligence officer. “I believe in the American constitution as the greatest product of the Enlightenment era,” he says. “It is worth my life.”

PAM MACKINNON (Artistic Director) is celebrating her inaugural season as A.C.T.’s fourth artistic director. She is a Tony, Drama Desk, and Obie Award–winning director, having directed upwards of 70 productions around the country, off-Broadway, and on Broadway. Her Broadway credits include Beau Willimon’s The Parisian Woman (with Uma Thurman), Amelie: A New Musical, David Mamet’s China Doll (with Al Pacino), Wendy Wasserstein’s The Heidi Chronicles (with Elisabeth Moss), Edward Albee’s A Delicate Balance (with Glenn Close and John Lithgow), Edward Albee’s Who’s Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (Tony Award, Drama Desk Award, and Outer Critics Circle nomination), and Bruce Norris’s Clybourne Park (Obie Award for Excellence in Direction, Tony and Lucille Lortel nominations). After five years as board chair of Clubbed Thumb, a downtown New York theater company dedicated to new American plays, she sits on its advisory board. She is an artistic associate of the Roundabout Theatre Company, a Usual Suspect of New York Theatre Workshop, and an alumna of the Drama League, Women’s Project, and Lincoln Center Theater’s Directors’ Labs. She is also the executive board president of the Stage Directors and Choreographers Society (SDC). She grew up in Toronto, Canada, and Buffalo, New York, acted through her teens, but majored in economics and political science at the University of Toronto and briefly pursued a PhD in political science at UC San Diego, before returning to her true passion: theater.

JENNIFER BIELSTEIN (Executive Director) joins A.C.T. with more than 25 years of theater management experience. She is currently president of the League of Resident Theatres (LORT)—an organization that represents 74 theaters nationwide—having previously served as LORT’s vice president, chair of its Equity, Diversity, and Inclusion Committee; secretary; and on multiple union negotiating teams. Before relocating to the Bay Area, Bielstein was the managing director of the Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis, managing director of Actors Theatre of Louisville, and executive director of Writers Theatre in Chicago. She has also worked for Steppenwolf Theatre Company, About Face Theatre, Northlight Theatre, and the Lincoln Park Zoo, as well as serving on the boards of the League of Chicago Theatres, Theatre Forward, the Arts and Cultural Attractions Council, and other civic boards. She has received the Center for Nonprofit Excellence’s Pyramid Award of Excellence in Leadership, and has been recognized as one of Louisville’s Business First’s 40 Under 40. In 2017, Bielstein was named by Twin Cities Business as a Person to Know, and, in 2018, Minnesota Business magazine named her as a Real Power 50 member. Bielstein is a graduate of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, attended Stanford’s Graduate School of Business Executive Program for Nonprofit Leaders in the Arts, and earned an MBA from Bellarmine University, where she received the MBA Faculty Merit Award and was inducted into Beta Gamma Sigma, the honor society for business programs.

MELISSA SMITH (Conservatory Director, Head of Acting) has served as Conservatory director and head of acting in the Master of Fine Arts Program at A.C.T. since 1995. During that time, she has overseen the expansion of the M.F.A. Program from a two- to a three-year course of study and the further integration of the M.F.A. Program faculty and student body with A.C.T.’s artistic wing, while also teaching and directing in the M.F.A. Program, Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T. She also successfully launched the San Francisco Semester, a semester-long intensive that deepens students’ acting, broadens knowledge of dramatic literature, and sharpens technical skills, while immersing actors in the cultural landscape of the Bay Area. Prior to assuming leadership of the Conservatory, Smith was the director of the Program in Theater and Dance at Princeton University. She has taught acting classes to students of all ages in various colleges, high schools, and studios around the continental United States, at the Mid-Pacific Institute in Hawaii, New York University’s La Pietra campus in Florence, and the Teatro di Pisa in San Miniato, Italy. She is featured in Acting Teachers of America: A Vital Tradition. Also a professional actor, she has performed regionally at the Hangar Theatre, A.C.T., the California Shakespeare Festival, and Berkeley Repertory Theatre; in New York at Primary Stages and Soho Rep.; and in England at the Barbican Centre in London and Birmingham Repertory Theatre. Smith holds a BA from Yale College and an MFA in acting from Yale School of Drama.

SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION DISCOUNTS
Full-time students, educators, and administrators save up to 50% off season subscriptions with valid ID. Visit act-sf.org/educate for details. Seniors (65+) save $40 on 8 plays, $35 on 7 plays, $30 on 6 plays, $25 on 5 plays, and $20 on 4 plays.

SINGLE TICKET DISCOUNTS
Joining our eClub is the best—and sometimes only—way to find out about special ticket offers. Visit act-sf.org/club to sign up. Find us on Facebook and Twitter for other great deals. Beginning two hours before curtain, a limited number of discounted tickets are available to seniors (65+), educators, administrators, and full-time students. For matinee performances, all seats are just $20 for seniors (65+). Valid ID required—limit one ticket per ID. Not valid for Premiere Orchestra seating. All rush tickets are subject to availability.

GROUP DISCOUNTS
Groups of 15 or more save up to 35%! For more information, call Anthony Miller at 415.439.2424.

AT THE THEATER
A.C.T.’s Geary Theater is located at 415 Geary Street. The lobby opens one hour before curtain. Bar service and refreshments are available one hour before curtain. The theater opens 30 minutes before curtain.

ABOUT OUR PLAYS
Copies of Words on Plays, A.C.T.’s in-depth performance guide, are on sale in the main lobby, at the theater bars, at the box office, and online at act-sf.org/wordsonplays.

REFRESHMENTS
Full bar service, sweets, and savory items are available one hour before the performance in Fred’s Columbia Room on the lower level and the Sky Bar on the third level. You can avoid the long lines at intermission by preordering food and beverages in the lower- and third-level bars. Bar drinks are now permitted in the theater.

CELL PHONES
If you carry a pager, beeper, cell phone, or watch with an alarm, please make sure that it is set to the “off” position while you are in the theater. Text messaging during the performance is very disruptive and not allowed.

PERFUMES
The chemicals found in perfumes, colognes, and scented aftershave lotions, even in small amounts, can cause severe physical reactions in some individuals. As a courtesy to fellow patrons, please avoid the use of these products when you attend the theater.

EMERGENCY TELEPHONE
Leave your seat location with those who may need to reach you and have them call 415.439.2317 in an emergency.

LATECOMERS
Performances begin promptly, and late seating is at the house manager’s discretion. Latecomers may have to watch the performance on a video monitor in the lobby until intermission. Latecomers and those who leave the theater during the performance may be seated in alternate seats (especially if they were in the first few rows) and can take their assigned seats at intermission.

LISTENING SYSTEMS
Headsets designed to provide clear, amplified sound anywhere in the auditorium are available free of charge in the lobby before performances. Please turn off your hearing aid when using an A.C.T. headset, as it will react to the sound system and make a disruptive noise.

RESTROOMS
Gender diversity is welcome at A.C.T. We invite audiences to use the restroom that best fits your gender identity or expression. If preferred, a single-user restroom can be found on the 5th floor.

A.C.T. is pleased to announce that an Automatic External Defibrillator (AED) is now available in the house management closet in the lobby of The Geary.

LOST AND FOUND
If you’ve misplaced an item while you’re still at the theater, please look for it at our merchandise stand in the lobby. Any items found by ushers or other patrons will be taken there. If you’ve already left the theater, please call 415.439.2471 and we’ll be happy to check our lost and found for you. Please be prepared with the date you attended the performance and your seat location.
