4000 MILES
When Dean returns home from the war in the Middle East, he discovers that his superior military skills don’t get him very far in the working world. He readjusts to non-bunker life by moving in with his parents and pregnant ex-wife, then takes the only job he can get—with a crusading politician on her own mission for “truth and justice.” A hilarious dark comedy about the hypocrisies and politics of postwar living, Dead Metaphor showcases the imaginative, audacious work of one of Canada’s most acclaimed playwrights.

In the spirit of the beloved hit The Black Rider, A.C.T. continues the tradition of introducing eclectic, unforgettable musical projects to the stage. A visionary musical work, Stuck Elevator is based on the true story of a Chinese deliveryman who was trapped in a Bronx elevator for 81 hours. Inventively staged by internationally acclaimed artist Chay Yew—and introducing the prodigious work of a brilliant young composing team—Stuck Elevator unleashes an evocative collision of stories, sounds, instruments, and ideas.

“[Yew has] visionary direction.”

Arcadia

In pursuit of a major literary sensation, two obsessive modern-day scholars piece together the volatile and passionate events that took place centuries earlier. Set in a sprawling English country house, Arcadia moves between the 19th century and the present through a series of love stories, as characters from both eras discover connections, unearth mysteries, and unravel hidden truths about the nature of heat and desire. Filled with gorgeous language—and brimming with romance—Arcadia is “the perfect blend of brains and emotion, wit and heartache” (The New York Times).

Two world premieres open at A.C.T. this spring.

DID YOU KNOW?

Perloff’s 20-season tenure has been marked by groundbreaking productions of classical works and new translations creatively colliding with exceptional contemporary theater; crossdisciplinary performances and international collaborations; the reintroduction of a core acting company; and “locavore” theater—theater made by, for, and about the San Francisco area. Her fierce commitment to audience engagement ushered in a new era of InterACT events and dramaturgical publications, inviting everyone to explore what goes on behind the scenes.

Perloff also put A.C.T.’s conservatory and educational programs at the center of our work. A.C.T.’s 45-year-old conservatory, led by Conservatory Director Melissa Smith, serves 3,000 students every year. Our three-year, fully accredited Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America’s actor training programs. Our M.F.A. Program students often grace our mainstage and perform around the Bay Area as alumni. Other programs include the world-famous Young Conservatory for students ages 8 to 19; Studio A.C.T. for adults; and the Summer Training Congress, an intensive program that attracts enthusiasts from around the world.

A.C.T. also brings the benefits of theater-based arts education to more than 8,000 Bay Area school students each year. Central to our ACTsmart education programs, run by Director of Education Elizabeth Brodersen, is the longstanding Student Matinee (SMAT) program, which since 1968 has brought tens of thousands of young people to A.C.T. performances. We also provide touring Will on Wheels Shakespeare productions, teaching artist residencies, in-school workshops, and in-depth study materials to Bay Area schools and after-school programs.

With our increased presence in the Central Market neighborhood marked by the opening of The Costume Shop theater and the current renovation of The Strand Theater across from UN Plaza, A.C.T. is poised to continue its leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco and the nation.

FROM THE ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

Dear Friends,

Happy New Year, and welcome to 4000 Miles! With the advent of the new year, we are introducing a wealth of remarkable contemporary work to our A.C.T. audiences, including this extremely beautiful Amy Herzog play and two world premieres: Canadian maestro George F. Walker’s dark comedy Dead Metaphor and Stuck Elevator, an explosive new Chinese American music theater piece that we have been developing all year.

It was my dream, during my 20th-anniversary season, to look to the future by making a major investment in some of the most unusual and fascinating new theater pieces and theater artists we could find. Many of you have generously contributed to the Carey Perloff Creative Venture Fund in ongoing support of our adventurous programming this year, which has journeyed from ancient Greece to the present moment. I am incredibly grateful to you, our fearless audience, for having such appetite for the untried, the irreverent, and the unexpected.

Amy Herzog first came to A.C.T. in 2008 to work on a wonderful play with our Young Conservatory called The Wendy Play. Our YC director, Craig Slaight, who has an astonishing nose for new work, collaborated with Herzog on this memorable piece for young actors, and we knew then that Herzog would be a talent to watch. It is often this way at A.C.T.: a new artist comes into our midst via our intrepid YC teenagers or our passionate M.F.A. Program students, whose training always includes the creation of new work. So it is a great pleasure to welcome Herzog’s work back to A.C.T. with a play that won the hearts of every New York critic and audience member who experienced it during its sold-out runs with Lincoln Center Theater last season.

Herzog’s 4000 Miles is an intergenerational play filled with surprises—a loving story between a grandmother and her grandson set against the backdrop of change, hope, and confusion. Herzog shows us how complex and new every stage of life can be and how hard it is to invite someone else to help us navigate it. It is a particularly American theme at the moment, as we witness a youth population suffer high unemployment and deferred dreams juxtaposed with retiring baby boomers anxious about losing the security they have worked all their lives to achieve. I am fascinated by how many writers are mining this generational shift to understand new relationships and new possibilities.

Just ahead, Dead Metaphor uses wicked comedy and sharp satire to tell the story of a young sniper recently returned from the Middle East, willing to take any job he can get and falling into the orbit of a fanatic politician with a taste for the extreme. Director Irene Lewis, whose production of Race was a brilliant success last season, returns to take on Walker’s dangerous and surprising comedy.

Following Dead Metaphor comes our highly anticipated visionary musical work Stuck Elevator, in which a Chinese deliveryman is trapped in an elevator in the Bronx for 81 hours and relives his life in China and his adventures in America while waiting to be rescued. Based on a true story, Stuck Elevator is an utterly unique fusion of many languages, gorgeous music, street poetry, and video and kinesthetic performance—I guarantee you will never have seen anything like it!

It is with great excitement that we anticipate the 2014 opening of our new 300-seat Strand Theater, where adventurous new work, unusual classics, open rehearsals, international offerings, multidisciplinary pieces, and groundbreaking educational programs can find a new and receptive home in San Francisco’s hot Central Market corridor. We hope the work we are doing this spring whets your appetite for the wide range of theatrical adventures A.C.T. will soon be able to bring you on multiple stages.

Thank you for coming!

Yours,

Carey Perloff

THE CAREY PERLOFF
Creative Venture Fund

In honor of Artistic Director Carey Perloff’s legacy at A.C.T. and her leadership within the Bay Area performing arts community, A.C.T.’s board of trustees has launched an ambitious fundraising campaign to raise $2.5 million to support important initiatives that are part of Perloff’s 20th Anniversary Season. These initiatives include:

• Programming support for The Costume Shop theater on Market Street and the production of a second stage season. Our new 50-seat black box theater opened in December 2011 and provides us with a vital new venue for our Master of Fine Arts Program students to engage new audiences in live theater experiences that are distinctly different from our mainstage offerings. A series of student and professional performances continue to introduce new voices in the American theater to diverse audiences while contributing to the vibrancy of San Francisco’s burgeoning Central Market arts district.

• The expansion of a new theater arts education program to reach underserved youth in our community. Our commitment to growing our education offerings in the community began with the appointment of Elizabeth Brodersen as the director of education this past season. Among her initial accomplishments include the initiation of new partnerships with public schools and youth service organizations.

• The staging of Arcadia, directed by Perloff. The much-anticipated return of Tom Stoppard’s scintillating comedy Arcadia will close Perloff’s 20th anniversary season. Heralded as “Stoppard’s most enthralling play to date” when we produced the West Coast premiere in 1995, Arcadia is sure to delight a new generation of theatergoers along with those eager to experience it again.

• The creation of a scholarship fund to support promising young actors in our nationally renowned M.F.A. Program. During her tenure, Perloff has led the development of a three-year accredited degree-granting program that attracts the most promising young actors in the country. The Carey Perloff M.F.A. Program Scholarship Fund will ensure that we continue to attract the next generation of theater artists to San Francisco and provide a foundation of training upon which they can build their careers as professional actors.

To find out more about the Carey Perloff Creative Venture Fund, contact Matt Henry, Director of Development, at 415.439.2436 or mhenry@act-sf.org.
“I read Dead Metaphor all in one sitting,” says A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff. “The first scene made me laugh out loud, the second scene was a shocker, and by the third scene I was totally hooked.”

In the spirit of Bruce Norris’s Clybourne Park, Dead Metaphor opens with an immediately recognizable scenario: a job interview. But for a sniper who has recently returned from the Middle East, such customary questions as “What are your strengths and weaknesses?” can be slippery. After spending years perfecting his target shooting in hostile situations, 27-year-old Dean Trusk has skills that are difficult to classify—and his stakes are especially high. Not only is he looking for a job, but he’s also readjusting to civilian life, living with his aging parents, and preparing to remarry his ex-wife, who is pregnant with their first child.

Written by George Walker, one of Canada’s most prolific and popular playwrights and television writers, Dead Metaphor juxtaposes the political and military worlds in audacious, unexpected ways. His fast-paced, biting comedies that examine the absurdity of contemporary urban culture have made Perloff a longtime champion of Walker’s work. “George Walker has an incredible knack for mining dark humor out of impossible circumstances, deploying a kind of vivid satire to make us listen to our own clichés and become aware of our own hypocrisy.” It was Walker’s style that brought Perloff to an immediate thought for a director. “There is no one better than Irene Lewis, who staged a brilliant production of David Mamet’s Race for us last year, to bring to life this world premiere. Our audiences are in for an outrageous ride and a vivid glimpse at the underbelly of modern life and contemporary politics.”
Amy Herzog speculates that, had she been born two generations ago, she would have been swept into socialist politics like her grandmother, Leepee Joseph. But the 33-year-old recently-married mother of a seven-month-old baby was not born two generations ago, and she became a much-celebrated playwright instead. “My grandmother would say her politics didn’t go into me,” Herzog told New York Times reporter Alexis Soloski in March 2012, “but the fact that I come from a very political family is very influential on me.” Joseph, also present for Soloski’s interview, responded to her granddaughter, “Oh, no question about that. But I didn’t see any politics in 4000 Miles.”

What Joseph did see in 4000 Miles was a lot of herself, her book-lined Greenwich Village apartment, and a very familiar situation: a 21-year-old grandchild coming to live with a grandparent. After graduating from Yale University in 2000—and following a cross-country bike ride with Habitat for Humanity that weaved its way from New Haven, Connecticut, to San Francisco—Herzog moved in with Joseph. She lived with her for six months as she tried to ignite her acting career. Their close relationship was tested by life in close quarters: “We had a very hard time,” Herzog admitted in an interview for American Theatre magazine last March. “It wasn’t clear the relationship would survive.”

Fortunately for both her professional life and her personal relationship with Joseph, Herzog was hired by TheatreworksUSA for the role of Beezus in a touring production of Len Jenkin’s adaptation of Ramona Quimby. It was a six-month gig. She should have been pleased: she was getting her union membership, making a living, and out of her grandmother’s house. Instead, the experience led to a crisis of faith. She felt “creatively stifled.”

Herzog found herself on the floor of a laundromat scribbling a 10-minute play called Granted, about a young woman who recently suffered a psychotic episode. It was terrible, she later realized, but when she wrote it she thought it was good—and, regardless of its merits, writing it had been more fulfilling than playing Beezus night after night. She left the tour a month early. College friends produced Granted in an old firehouse, and for the first time Herzog saw her work performed in front of an audience. She kept writing.

Two years later she was accepted into Yale School of Drama’s M.F.A. in Playwriting program on the basis of In Translation, a drama about a Kafka scholar, the first of two works that mirror the structure of Arcadia. (As an undergraduate actor, Herzog had played Thomasina in the Stoppard play.) What she calls her breakthrough came in her second year in the program, when she wrote Hungry, which abandoned any “weird structural conceits” and focused on the interactions of three teenagers in New Jersey. The following year, she wrote The Wendy Play based on her experiences teaching at a creative arts camp and challenging the camp’s conservative management when asked to compromise her beliefs while writing a play for the campers. With a cast of 16, The Wendy Play debuted in A.C.T.’s conservatory in 2008 as the first coproduction between the Master of Fine Arts Program and the Young Conservatory.

Herzog became an artist to watch in 2010 when After the Revolution—the first play to feature Joseph’s stand-in, Vera—opened at the Williamstown Theatre Festival in Massachusetts and then Playwrights Horizons in New York. In June of the following year, 4000 Miles opened as part of Lincoln Center Theater’s LCT3 program, winning Herzog an OBIE Award for Best New American Play. Meanwhile, she was working Belleville, which opened in November 2011 at Yale Repertory Theatre. Her most recent play, The Great God Pan, opened last December at Playwrights Horizons. Herzog is currently working on commissions from Yale Repertory Theatre and Playwrights Horizons, and in recognition of her success, she received the 2012 New York Times Outstanding Playwright Award.

Amidst all this activity, Herzog found time (between a rehearsal for The Great God Pan and relieving her babysitter) to speak with us last November about 4000 Miles.

You have a reputation for incorporating elements from your family members’ lives into your plays. In 4000 Miles, Vera is based on your grandmother, Leepee; is Leo inspired by anyone?
I don’t know that my plays are that much more personal than anyone else’s, although I end up talking about it a lot. Leo is loosely based on a cousin of mine, but I wouldn’t want to overstate that because this is a cousin who grew up far away from me and I don’t know him that intimately. There were circumstances in his life that inspired the play, but the character came from me and my experiences just as much as from anything I observed about him.

I have a lot of love for the character. We meet Leo at an extremely confused and lost moment. He was already confused and lost, and then the crisis hits [during his cross-country journey] and he becomes much more so. I was about 30 when I wrote the play, and I was looking back on my 20s and that time of real confusion that I think a lot of people experience in their early 20s, when they are supposed to be taking steps to become adults but they don’t have any of the tools yet. I feel a lot of sympathy for people in that position.

Do you consider Leo a political character? Does Leo consider himself political?
Yes, I think he considers himself political. I think his politics run more towards a gentle version of anarchy than towards Vera’s socialism. He considers himself political in a very contemporary way. I think he has certain causes that he really relates to: the green movement/environmentalism, for example. I don’t think he has an extremely cohesive political philosophy. He has a collection of causes that seem pretty important to him.

Yes, I think he considers himself political. I think his politics run more towards a gentle version of anarchy than towards Vera’s socialism. He considers himself political in a very contemporary way. I think he has certain causes that he really relates to: the green movement/environmentalism, for example. I don’t think he has an extremely cohesive political philosophy. He has a collection of causes that seem pretty important to him.

Do you think that this is a weakness of our generation: our pick-and-choose style of politics?
I know my more hardcore leftist relatives definitely feel that way very strongly. I have conflicting feelings about it, which ended up in 4000 Miles. On the one hand, I feel some mourning/grief for my generation lacking the kind of older ideology that was very cozy in certain ways. It was all-encompassing and clear and organized and it united a lot of people.

On the other hand, as an artist I’m someone who spends a lot of time questioning and wondering and equivocating, and it wouldn’t be a comfortable fit for me to adhere so strongly to one kind of dogma. So, on the one hand I do feel like something has been lost, but on the other hand I can say, “It’s okay to be thoughtful and confused and all over the place.” I think there are advantages to both generations’ approaches.
After you graduated from college, you went on a cross-country bike ride with Habitat for Humanity. What was that like?

It was grueling. I went into it very blithely. I didn't train: I went on one or two 25-mile rides, but I was 21 and in reasonably good shape and thought I'd be fine.

The first week or two were dreadful. I was in terrible, terrible pain all the time. It was early June and we had a spell of cold, rainy weather, and I really, really questioned whether I could do it. I hadn't had that kind of challenge—one that was so straightforward and that I felt so unequal to—in a long time. Even as I got a lot stronger and the cycling became easier, it required a certain mindset. I had to narrow my focus down to just getting through the next day. It was incredibly exhausting. Emotionally so.

How long was the trip?
It was 4,250 miles and we did it in eight weeks.

Was it rewarding as well as grueling?
Yes.

In the moment, or looking back now?
It was rewarding in the moment. It was a rare experience. You felt every day, “This is something I am going to remember for the rest of my life.” Especially as we cleared the Northeast and ended up in places I’d never seen, with landscapes I had never seen—especially once we got to the Rockies, Utah, Colorado, and Nevada. I was very aware of being in the midst of something really important and meaningful that would stay with me forever.

Then you lived with your grandmother for six months, a completely different kind of challenge.
It was amazing in the end because we had to get through some really difficult times, and the act of getting through them brought us closer, I would say. I had just graduated from college and had to start my life as an actor in New York City, so I was incredibly anxious and turned around. Then trying to live with a new roommate from a very different generation, who I think had expectations of me as a roommate that I really didn’t understand to begin with. At age 21–22, I didn't really have the emotional tools to navigate the situation gracefully. So, we had some bad fights. Which is weird. I'm not a person who gets into a lot of fights, but we had some really tense times.

What were the expectations she had of you?
Simple things like cleanliness. How often I swept my room. I grew up in a very permissive household and then I was in college, so I wasn’t used to having a guardian who had ways of keeping house. I thought I was keeping up to her standards, but I was not. She also had a lot of advice for me. She had been in the theater herself, so she wanted to be helpful to me, but she was in the theater 60–70 years ago and I wasn’t particularly appreciative of her help, and I think that angered her.

She kept saying I needed to “knock on the door” of New Dramatists and tell them I was available to do readings, which is actually surprisingly close to being a good idea. She knew what New Dramatists was, and she knew that they did readings: all that was really good, but I don't think it would have been useful for me to walk in and say, “Hey Todd London, guess what: I’m available to do readings!” That’s what was hard about it. She did know some things, so it was hard to dismiss her outright, but it was also hard to politely explain to her why I wasn’t taking her advice.

I read that she was disappointed when you decided to stop acting.
Yeah, and I didn't know how disappointed she was, but she still brings it up all the time. Including at my wedding.

Really?
Yeah: in her toast. She said, “Well, Amy, as you know I really hoped you'd be an actress, and I'm very disappointed about it, but I guess things are going well for you these days, and I'm glad that you found Sam.”

Do you still see her often?
Sure, she lived with us during the hurricane [Hurricane Sandy] because she lost her power. Her power's back on now.

A.C.T. is opening 2013 with three exciting new plays. The West Coast premiere of Amy Herzog’s 4000 Miles will be followed by two world premieres: Canadian playwright George F. Walker’s dark comedy Dead Metaphor, about an out-of-work sniper, and Byron Au Yong and Aaron Jafferis’s innovative musical Stuck Elevator, about a man who is trapped inside an elevator for 81 hours.

A.C.T.’s commitment to developing new theater often begins in our world-renowned Master of Fine Arts Program. We were first introduced to Amy Herzog through The Wendy Play, which she brought to the Conservatory in 2008; it was the first coproduction between our M.F.A. Program and our Young Conservatory.

From the moment they arrive, our M.F.A. Program students participate in staged readings of scripts by playwrights we are interested in and intensive workshops with guest artists. These artists devise work with our students, write work for our students, and work with our students to explore pieces that are already under construction. Recent guests include the OBIE-winning duo Katie Pearl and Lisa D’Amour, local playwright J. C. Lee, and Brooklyn-based playwright Jackie Sibblies Drury.

A.C.T. Artistic Associate Beatrice Basso, who specializes in new-play development, is always on the lookout for engaging playwrights to match with our students. “We try to create an exciting synergy between artists,” she says of the process. “We identify a voice that we’re attracted to aesthetically, a writer who demonstrates muscularity of thought and language, and consider the needs of each individual class. I think these collaborations work best when the playwright has a story that really needs to be developed. When that is the case, it becomes an important experience for the students, because they are involved in the creative process in a realistic way.”

This involvement is key to their development as actors. Conservatory Director Melissa Smith explains: “Many of our student actors come to us without ever having had a live playwright in the rehearsal room. They know what it is to work with a script, but they don’t always connect that script to a playwright who had an intention behind it. To work on a new piece is to see a script develop. Some years ago, when we first started including new work in the curriculum, some students got a first draft of a play and simply thought, ‘I don’t like it.’ They had no sense of how it might evolve. Working with playwrights helps actors by teaching them how to read and understand a play.”

To this end, the first semester of the first year in the M.F.A. Program begins with the creation of original work: The Created Movement Project, a devised piece developed under the guidance of a choreographer, followed by The Created Language Project, which synthesizes text and lyrics with movement. Also, first-year acting classes (taught by Smith) begin with storytelling exercises. “I want them to think of themselves as storytellers first,” Smith explains, “and understand structure: beginning, middle, and end.”

In 2011, Smith decided to take her storytelling exercise a step further. “I was talking to Beatrice, and she said, ‘What if we got a playwright involved?’” Thus began our collaboration with playwright Steve Yockey, who has penned plays for the two most recent A.C.T. first-year classes: very still & hard to see in 2011 and Niagara Falls this past December.

To create both plays, Yockey flew to San Francisco from New York to spend several days working with the students, using poems, stories, and images as inspiration. “It was a fun few days. We got to play around with ideas, get to know our classmates better, put together little sketches, and tell stories,” recalls first-year student Joel Bernard. “It’s a rare opportunity for an actor to perform in a role that was written specifically for him or her. It’s a lot of responsibility.”

Second-year student Elyse Price agrees: “The most exciting thing about creating a role is to be free of any preconceptions of that particular story. It is a new story to tell—we put our heads together and figure out exactly how we will do it, top to bottom. Who are these people? What do we want the audience to walk out of the theater thinking about? We are creating from scratch, which is such an inspiring feeling.”

The experience gives A.C.T. graduates a leg up on the competition. “When young actors get out of school, new scripts are often one of the first things they’ll get to work on in smaller theaters,” says Smith. “If they haven’t learned about that collaborative relationship with a playwright, they’re going to be at a disadvantage.”

The benefits have already become clear for third-year Rebekah Brockman, who this winter will originate the role of Jenny in Dead Metaphor on the A.C.T. mainstage. It is an intimidating task for any young actor, but Brockman believes her training at A.C.T. has prepared her well. “I have a newfound respect for the intention of a playwright and the message a new play is attempting to convey,” she says. “My peers and mentors have inspired me as an actor to do justice to the playwright’s intentions.”

Dead Metaphor begins a limited run on February 28, 2013. Visit act-sf.org/deadmetaphor for more information about the show.
In the spring of 2012, A.C.T. was presented with a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to purchase a second home: The Strand Theater in San Francisco’s Central Market neighborhood, directly across from UN Plaza. The Strand, which opened in 1917, has lived through various incarnations before being shuttered in 2003. Once A.C.T. completes its reconstruction, The Strand will complement A.C.T.’s Geary Theater from both an audience and artistic point of view and extend A.C.T.’s reach into Central Market neighborhood communities. This new venue will allow A.C.T. to take new artistic risks, to collaborate with exciting young artists, to expand our education programs, and to produce theater in versatile and innovative ways. In doing so, we hope to welcome an expanded and eclectic group of theater lovers from across the Bay Area, as well as introduce new audiences to the distinct pleasures of live performance in a relaxed and informal setting.
The Strand Theater opened as The Jewel in 1917 as part of the famous Grauman chain. The four-story structure was designed by architect Emory Fraiser as a combination house: a 725-seat venue for both motion pictures and live performances, boasting a projection screen, a stage, and a musical pit. It was renamed many times—The College, then The Francesca, then The Sun—before owners settled on The Strand in 1928. From 1940 to 1977, the building was run by the West Side Theatre Company, but the advent of television dealt a hard blow to Market Street’s once-thriving theater district. To attract customers, The Strand offered triple bills (switched out daily) and nightly bingo games, but business declined. In 1977, Mike Thomas bought The Strand, restored its deteriorating interior, and resurrected the venue by turning it into a well-known revival cinema, popular for its midnight showings of The Rocky Horror Picture Show. Home video undercut the revival theater business, and The Strand once again suffered. In 1994, under new management, it became a porn theater, infamous for its unsavory clientele and activities. The city raided the venue in 2003, and it has been boarded up for the last nine years.

THE HISTORY OF THE STRAND

Two doors down from A.C.T.’s recently opened, funky 49-seat Costume Shop theater, the new Strand will greatly expand the choices our audiences can make for their theatergoing experience. The renovated facility will hold an intimate 299-seat theater and a beautiful 2,500-square-foot event/performance space upstairs. This upstairs room will boast breathtaking views of the dome of City Hall and flexible seating for up to 130 people in multiple configurations. It will welcome a wide range of events, including specially commissioned new work, cabaret and theater performances by A.C.T.’s M.F.A. Program and Young Conservatory students, educational workshops with our school partners, event rentals for community groups, and memorable celebrations for the A.C.T. community. The double-story windowed lobby will literally set Market Street aglow, becoming a visible beacon of the arts in San Francisco.

Not only does the Strand project represent an exciting and pivotal moment in A.C.T.'s storied history, it also reinforces A.C.T.'s cultural and civic commitment to San Francisco. Located at 1127 Market Street, in the heart of a long-blighted neighborhood that is now undergoing remarkable transformation, The Strand will be a theater ingrained in the very fabric of its neighborhood, on a lively, crowded block in the middle of the city and at the heart of the burgeoning tech hub that is fueling innovation in San Francisco. Attracting theatergoers from across the Bay Area, The Strand will not just be a source of entertainment—it will also be a lively social, civic, and educational center.

“Activating buildings around Central Market and the Tenderloin is key to the overall improvement of the area. I’m encouraged by A.C.T.’s purchase of The Strand and see it as an important step in cultivating a unique identity for the neighborhood that will bring new jobs and transform the community.”
San Francisco Mayor Ed Lee

Prior to her tenure at Roundabout, Richard served as business manager of Westport Country Playhouse, theater manager for Stamford Center for the Arts, and business manager for Atlas Scenic Studio. She began her career working as a stagehand, sound designer, and scenic artist assistant.

MELISSA SMITH (Conservatory Director) oversees the administration of the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program, Young Conservatory, Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T., in addition to serving as the master acting teacher of the M.F.A. Program. Before joining A.C.T. in 1995, Smith served as director of the program in theater and dance at Princeton University, where she taught acting for six years. She has worked with people of all ages in venues around the country, including teaching in Hawaii and in Florence, Italy. Also a professional actor, she has performed in numerous off-off Broadway plays and at regional theaters, including A.C.T. In 2004 she toured London and Birmingham (U.K.) in Berkeley Repertory Theatre’s production of Continental Divide. Smith holds a B.A. in English and theater from Yale College and an M.F.A. in acting from Yale School of Drama.

ELLEN RICHARD (Executive Director) joined A.C.T. as executive director in August 2010. She served previously as executive director of off-Broadway’s nonprofit Second Stage Theatre in New York City. During her tenure at Second Stage, she was responsible for the purchase contract of the Helen Hayes Theatre and substantial growth in subscription income and growth in individual giving. Under Richard’s leadership, Second Stage provided the initial home for the Broadway productions Everyday Rapture, Next to Normal, and The Little Dog Laughed.
