AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER, San Francisco’s Tony Award–winning nonprofit theater, nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training, and an ongoing engagement with our community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Executive Director Ellen Richard, we embrace our responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent our relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of our creative work. Founded by pioneer of the regional theater movement William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season in 1967. Since then, we’ve performed more than 320 productions to a combined audience of more than seven million people. We reach more than 250,000 people through our productions and programs every year.

The beautiful, historic Geary Theater—rising from the rubble of the catastrophic earthquake and fires of 1906 and immediately hailed as the “perfect playhouse”—has been our home since the beginning. When the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake ripped a gaping hole in the ceiling, destroying the proscenium arch and dumping tons of debris on the first six rows of orchestra seats, the San Francisco community rallied together to raise a record-breaking $30 million to rebuild it. The theater reopened in 1996 with a production of The Tempest directed by Perloff, who took over after A.C.T.’s second artistic director, gentleman artist Ed Hastings, retired in 1992.

Perloff’s 20-season tenure has been marked by groundbreaking productions of classical works and new translations creatively colliding with exceptional contemporary theater; crossdisciplinary performances and international collaborations; the reintroduction of a core acting company; and “locavore” theater—theater made by, for, and about the San Francisco area. Her fierce commitment to audience engagement ushered in a new era of InterACT events and dramaturgical publications, inviting everyone to explore what goes on behind the scenes.

Perloff also put A.C.T.’s conservatory and educational programs at the center of our work. A.C.T.’s 45-year-old conservatory, led by Conservatory Director Melissa Smith, serves 3,000 students every year. Our three-year, fully accredited Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America’s actor training programs. Our M.F.A. Program students often grace our mainstage and perform around the Bay Area as alumni. Other programs include the world-famous Young Conservatory for students ages 8 to 19; Studio A.C.T. for adults; and the Summer Training Congress, an intensive program that attracts enthusiasts from around the world.

A.C.T. also brings the benefits of theater-based arts education to more than 8,000 Bay Area school students each year. Central to our ACTsmart education programs, run by Director of Education Elizabeth Brodersen, is the longstanding Student Matinee (SMAT) program, which since 1968 has brought tens of thousands of young people to A.C.T. performances. We also provide touring Will on Wheels Shakespeare productions, teaching artist residencies, in-school workshops, and in-depth study materials to Bay Area schools and after-school programs.

With our increased presence in the Central Market neighborhood marked by the opening of The Costume Shop theater and the current renovation of The Strand Theater across from UN Plaza, A.C.T. is poised to continue its leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco and the nation.

Dear Friends,

Towards the end of Arcadia, Hannah rescues Valentine from despair about his grouse research by saying: “Comparing what we’re looking for misses the point. It’s wanting to know that makes us matter. Otherwise we’re going out the way we came in.” One of the wonderful things about Arcadia is its insatiable appetite for every kind of knowledge: carnal, literary, emotional, scientific, historical. The motor of the play is driven by the hunger of its characters to piece together the puzzle of their existence. Perhaps that’s why it is so exhilarating to rehearse, because the clues are buried and tantalizing, and the destination isn’t always in sight. It’s as much fun to watch a researcher go horribly wrong as it is to witness the eureka! moment when a discovery is made. Being in the room with a Stoppard play is a wake-up call to every sense: the journey is intellectual, visceral, sensual, comic, romantic, and filled with longing. The most elusive knowledge, as Stoppard reveals over and over again, is self-knowledge; almost as elusive is the knowledge of another person’s heart. And so, as Chloë rightly concludes, “The only thing going wrong is people fancying people who aren’t supposed to be part of the plan.”

It has been an exhilarating spring at A.C.T., and we are deeply grateful to all of you who took a risk on three brand-new plays and made them so successful. It is this appetite for innovation that is fueling our thinking about our new Strand Theater, set to open in Central Market in January 2015. There, our new series, New Strands, will weave projects together in original and exciting ways—with strands made up of songs, plays, dance, and spoken word; strands that are local and strands that are international; strands that are cutting edge and strands that are classical; strands that are live action and strands that embrace the technology of our new neighborhood.

Meanwhile, our beloved Geary will continue to embrace vivid theatricality and language of scope. With that in mind, we have chosen productions for A.C.T.’s 2013–14 season that are filled with big dreams, big conflict, and big journeys. Here is a quick summary of some of what is in store for you:

A.C.T.’s 2013–14 Season

1776
We are delighted to open with Frank Galati’s remarkable interpretation of one of the best and most iconic musicals ever penned about American politics, 1776. I had the good fortune to see this production at the Asolo Repertory Theatre in Florida a few weeks after last November’s presidential election. The brilliant way in which 1776 weaves a complex and suspenseful tale about the beginning of our democracy resonates so powerfully with our own deeply divided Congress. Galati has a wonderful gift for making every moment and every character matter, no matter how small, and I was captivated by his humane and lively vision. It will be an honor to welcome this legendary director to A.C.T. with a production that will fascinate the entire family.

Underneath the Lintel
Since his beautiful performance in Scorched, I have been working with beloved A.C.T. favorite David Strathairn on finding the perfect project to bring him back. Underneath the Lintel is a riveting ghost story by Glen Berger about a librarian whose discovery of a library book that is overdue by more than a century sends him on a quest around the world that eventually leads him straight back to his own identity. Lintel is a magical piece of storytelling that, in the hands of a consummate actor like Strathairn, will leave you breathless and transported.

Major Barbara
By now it has become a running joke in the A.C.T. offices about how much I love Canadians, but I am so happy to report that the love affair continues with our next big international exchange, a collaboration with Theatre Calgary on one of George Bernard Shaw’s greatest plays about women, war, and money: Major Barbara. This idea began brewing in the summer of 2010 when Theatre Calgary invited A.C.T.’s Tosca Cafe to open their season, and indeed the lead in our Canadian version of Tosca, Dean Paul Gibson, will play Undershaft in Major Barbara. Featuring a mix of Canadians and Americans and directed by Theatre Calgary’s artistic director, Dennis Garnhum, this is a rare example of how international dialogue can become an incredibly fruitful annual event.

Napoli!

If we had to list actors who are dearest to our hearts, A.C.T. Associate Artist Marco Barricelli would certainly be central to that list; and when we read Beatrice Basso and Linda Alper’s brilliant version of Italian playwright Eduardo De Filippo’s Napoli Milionaria! we knew we had found the perfect vehicle for Marco. This is a deeply moving and richly humorous play about a Neapolitan family that descends into black marketeering in order to survive during World War II. Like Brecht’s Mother Courage, Napoli follows a resourceful mother, Amalia (who will be played by Phèdre’s incomparable Seana McKenna), who desperately tries to keep her family together while the world around her is falling apart. This is A.C.T.’s salute to the Year of Italian Culture in the United States—and to San Francisco’s rich Italian heritage. (And it will show you how to stockpile coffee in your mattress for the lean years ahead.)

“Big dreams, big conflict, and big journeys”

The Orphan of Zhao

So much discovery has already happened in and around Stuck Elevator that we were anxious to continue our exploration of Chinese theater, and what better way to do that than to go back to the most enduring Chinese epic of all, The Orphan of Zhao, a remarkable tale from the fourth century BCE that has been dubbed “the Chinese Hamlet.” Telling the story of a humble Chinese doctor—portrayed in our production by the inimitable Bay Area native BD Wong—who sacrifices his own son to keep alive the only surviving member of the decimated Zhao clan, Zhao is at once both personal and vast. Filled with suspense, sorrow, court intrigue, and compassion, Zhao provides a window into China that feels as vivid as when it was first written.

Venus in Fur

And because no season is complete without a dose of sizzling sex, we will bring you David Ives’s Venus in Fur, one of the hottest tickets in New York last season and a wildly theatrical take on how far one actress will go to inhabit a role. We invite you to unlock the mysteries of this cat-and-mouse thriller that will surely heat up The Geary next spring.

That’s not all! One more title will follow shortly, but we couldn’t wait to give you a taste of what’s in store for you in this magnificent space as we continue to push the boundaries, travel the globe, and create theater that is both immediate and surprising.

While Arcadia performs at The Geary, the National Theatre of Scotland’s unforgettable Black Watch plays at the Mission Armory. It has been a joy to work on two such diverse and richly imagined plays simultaneously, and we urge you to take advantage of both!

Finally, a huge thank you to all of you who made our Time Warp Gala such a blast and such a rousing success. To bring so many strands of A.C.T.’s family together was incredibly heartening and exciting. This is an amazing time to get involved with A.C.T., and we hope if you are new to us and inspired by what you see today, you will reach out and join us, either by taking a class in our renowned Conservatory or by supporting our vast educational outreach programs or by coming to a postplay discussion (You have to try Theater on the Couch!) or any of the other innumerable ways to connect.

One more thing: I am dedicating my work in this production to my daughter, Lexie, who was six when I first directed Arcadia and has shaped my thinking ever since.

And now, enjoy!

All my thanks,

Carey Perloff, Artistic Director

About the Play

Every Beautiful Thread

A Conversation with Director Carey Perloff

by Michael Paller

When Carey Perloff directed the West Coast premiere of Arcadia at A.C.T. in September 1995, The Geary Theater was still out of commission due to the extensive damage caused by the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake. Now, 20 years later, she is excited to finally bring Tom Stoppard’s masterwork to A.C.T.’s majestic stage.

Why did you want to revisit Arcadia?

Arcadia was the first Tom Stoppard play that I ever worked on. I did it in my fourth season at A.C.T. when we were in diaspora. We performed in a small theater called the Stage Door (now Ruby Skye, the night club), which made it a somewhat smaller endeavor [than producing at The Geary].

I have deeply fond memories of working on Arcadia. It’s how I met Tom. When I read the play, I immediately wanted to do it, but Lincoln Center Theater said no—they wouldn’t license it because they were doing it and wanted exclusive rights. Finally, I figured out how to contact Tom directly. I said, “You don’t know me, but A.C.T. has a history of doing your plays and we’re a very literate theater and I will treat this material with great reverence and great joy and I love it and I promise you it will be worth it, so is there any way you can intervene on our behalf?” The next thing I knew, I got a call from [Lincoln Center Executive Director] Bernie Gersten saying, “Okay, you’ve got the rights.”

Right after the A.C.T. production, I was in London and I met Tom for the first time in the bar of the National Theatre. I had written him letters throughout the production whenever I had questions, and he wrote back the funniest, smartest replies. I thought he was hilarious. We had become epistolary friends, so when I met him in person I felt that I already knew him. It was the beginning of an incredibly fruitful and satisfying theatrical relationship and we’ve done many of his plays. He came to A.C.T. for the U.S. premieres of Indian Ink and The Invention of Love, and also for our productions of Night and Day, The Real Thing, and Travesties. He’s someone from whom I’ve learned an enormous amount and whom I adore.

Has your thinking about Arcadia changed after 20 years?

There is a thread running through this play that’s about loss. How do we accept loss in human experience? I think I saw that as a young person directing it, but I don’t think I realized what a profound thread it is. Arcadia is very deeply about time. I posted one of its most beautiful monologues on my wall:

We shed as we pick up, like travelers who must carry everything in their arms, and what we let fall will be picked up by those left behind. The procession is very long and life is very short. We die on the march. But there is nothing outside the march so nothing can be lost to it.

I realize what a theme that has always been for Tom. You try to live in the moment, but time is rushing past and things that are so precious to you inevitably disappear: love, childhood, relationships, literature. I love the fact that Thomasina is mourning the lost plays of Aeschylus, because I’ve always felt that way as a classicist. I’ve always thought, “How could these be lost?” and, “How random it is that we have Euripides’ The Bacchae because somebody wrapped a wine vessel in a play.” We should mourn that. But Tom says, “No, you don’t have to mourn that. You celebrate that it happened to begin with.”

What other themes run through Stoppard’s plays?

It really annoyed me when The Real Thing came out and the critics said, “Surprise! Tom Stoppard has a heart.” I think he’s always been deeply romantic. He’s a very shy man who’s also incredibly loving and kind, and he has a huge romantic soul that is protected by his fiercely rigorous intellect. That seeming schism between heart and mind—between Romanticism and Classicism—has always existed in his plays. In some of his plays the romantic wins, and in some the rationalist wins. It depends on the mood he’s in when he writes the play. Tom has always wrestled with that collision and I think it’s why the plays are so much fun.

In Arcadia, he absolutely turns the deck on its head. The romantic turns out to be the scientist, Valentine. Science has become so overwhelmingly beautiful. When you start to iterate fractals, it is magical. It is like seeing the hand of God. It is like seeing a part of a coastline and then a bigger section. That same iteration and fractal gets bigger, and it is holy, spiritual, and beautiful. It is utterly wrong to think that science is in some way unromantic and rational, just as it’s wrong to say that someone in the humanities can’t be precise and scientific.

What is Stoppard like as a colleague?

He’s quite different from Harold Pinter. Pinter gave notes in the room that were uncannily active, profound, and simple, because he was a great actor. He would say one thing, and you’d think, “Oh my god, that’s it!” Tom is not like that because he’s not an actor. He gives really funny notes, which tend to be things like, “Oh, I’m sorry, it’s all about sex.”

Sometimes he will explain things in a really ‘round-the-bend way, but what I love about Tom is that he’s a playwright. I mean he is “a maker of a play,” and he understands that a play is a blueprint for a production. His favorite thing is when a designer or director or actor or choreographer or composer will solve a moment in his play that he hadn’t solved.

The Science of Arcadia

Fermat’s Last Theorem

Pierre de Fermat (1601–65) was a French mathematician whose last theorem holds that “it is impossible to separate a cube into two cubes, a fourth power into two fourth powers, or, generally, any power above the second into two powers of the same degree.” In the margin of a book discovered after his death, Fermat wrote that he had found “a remarkable proof which the margin is too small to contain.” Mathematicians sought the elusive proof for centuries; many thought it was impossible. Finally, in 1993, Princeton University mathematician Andrew Wiles solved it after seven years of concentrated effort.

Newtonian Thought

In 1687, Sir Isaac Newton published his seminal Philosophiae Naturalis Principia Mathematica, which describes universal gravitation and the three laws of motion. Newton’s work proved that the motion of both celestial bodies and objects on earth could be predicted through the same series of equations. His empirical law of cooling states that all objects will eventually cool or warm to the temperature of their surroundings.

The Second Law of Thermodynamics

The second law of thermodynamics states: “In all energy exchanges, if no energy enters or leaves the system, the potential energy of the state will always be less than that of the initial state.” In other words, as energy is transferred from one form to another, some is lost as heat. The law explains the tendency of physical phenomena to degenerate from order to disorder (entropy).

Chaos Theory

In the mid twentieth century, scientists studying apparently random natural phenomena discovered repeating patterns of periodicity, patterns that were self-similar on every scale into infinity; in other words, they were regularly irregular. This could not be explained by the linear equations of classical algebra and geometry. Thus began chaos theory, which states that seemingly random occurrences can be predicted by nonlinear equations. An important property of many chaotic systems is that the nonlinear equations that describe them are characterized by self-reinforcing feedback processes, in which the result of an operation is fed back into the equation and run through again and again (iterated).
A Brief Biography of Tom Stoppard

Tom Stoppard was born Tomáš Straüßler in Zlin, Czechoslovakia, in 1937. In 1939 his family immigrated to Singapore, which Tom evacuated with his mother and brother in 1942 before the World War II Japanese invasion. His father, who remained behind, was killed. Stoppard’s mother became a manager of a shoe shop in Darjeeling, India, where Tom met the English language at Mount Hermon, a school run by American Methodists, and his mother met Kenneth Stoppard, a major in the British Army. In 1946, Kenneth brought his new family home with him to Derbyshire, England. "As soon as we all landed up in England, I knew I had found a home,” Stoppard says of his arrival. “I embraced the language and the landscape.”

He found school dull and left at age 17 for a job as a newspaper reporter in Bristol. His work as a freelance journalist financed his writing: radio plays, a novel (Lord Malquist and Mr. Moon), and, eventually, stage plays. In 1964, as part of a five-month cultural exchange in a Berlin mansion, he wrote Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Meet King Lear, the one-act first draft of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead. After the Royal Shakespeare Company and the Royal Court rejected it, the playwright’s agent reluctantly allowed university students to perform the play in the Edinburgh Festival Fringe on “a stage the size of a ping pong table.” The production was a surprise success, and the National Theatre in London requested the script. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern premiered there in 1967, transferred to Broadway the same year, and went on to win the 1968 Tony Award for Best Play.

Stoppard’s subsequent plays include The Real Inspector Hound, After Magritte, Jumpers, Travesties (Tony Award), Every Good Boy Deserves Favour (with André Previn), Night and Day, The Real Thing (Tony Award), Hapgood, Arcadia (Olivier Award and New York Drama Critics’ Circle Award), Indian Ink, The Invention of Love, and Rock ’n’ Roll. The 2006 American premiere of Stoppard’s trilogy, The Coast of Utopia, at Lincoln Center won seven Tony Awards.

Stoppard’s translations and adaptations include works by Federico García Lorca, Arthur Schnitzler, Johann Nestroy, Václav Havel, Ferenc Molnár, and Gérald Sibleyras. He has written screenplays for Despair, The Romantic Englishwoman, The Human Factor, Brazil (coauthor), Empire of the Sun, The Russia House, Billy Bathgate, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (which he also directed), Shakespeare in Love (Golden Globe and Academy awards, with coauthor Marc Norman), Enigma, and Anna Karenina. Stoppard was knighted in 1997.

Stoppard has a long history at A.C.T.: the theater has produced at least two Stoppard plays every decade since 1969, and Artistic Director Carey Perloff has directed two of his American premieres: Indian Ink (1999) and The Invention of Love (2000). In reference to his popularity here, Stoppard has joked, “I am the house playwright!”
Lord Byron

While not the first of the Romantic poets, the sixth Lord Byron, born George Gordon on January 22, 1788, is undoubtedly the most iconic. For Byron, life relentlessly imitated art (or perhaps vice versa). His Byronic Hero—a solitary, melancholy, sensuous social outlaw—was part fictional, part autobiographical, and became one of the most prominent and celebrated fixtures of Romantic literature.

Byron began writing poetry as a teenager and published his first book, Hours of Idleness, in 1807, the same year he graduated from Trinity College at Cambridge. Though widely praised, the book received a caustic critique from the Edinburgh Review, and Byron was incensed. In 1809, the poet published a response, “English Bards and Scotch Reviewers,” which excoriated his more fashionable contemporaries. His Childe Harold’s Pilgrimage (1812) cemented his rank as one of the most sought-after writers of the day.

When he wasn’t writing, Byron was traveling Europe and cultivating a reputation for eccentricity and excess. Along with drinking, gambling, and shooting, womanizing was among his chief pursuits; his affairs with Lady Caroline Lamb and his half-sister, Augusta Leigh, were especially notorious.

As his literary career bloomed, his personal scandals multiplied, and in July 1809 he abruptly left the country, indicating in letters, “I will never live in England if I can avoid it. Why, must remain a secret.” His letters also indicate he spent April of that year at his ancestral home, Newstead Abbey, but there is no evidence of his whereabouts between the 10th and 12th, when playwright Tom Stoppard has him visit the nearby Coverlys in Arcadia.

In 1816, Lord Byron left England for good. Though he continued to write, his popularity waned. He died in Greece in 1824, where he was mourned as a hero for his support of the Greek war of independence.

Lady Lamb

Lady Caroline Lamb was born November 13, 1785, and married William Lamb, second Lord Melbourne, in 1805. They had a son, Augustus, whom modern scholars believe suffered from epilepsy and a form of autism.

Lamb’s affair with Lord Byron began in 1812. While not her first extramarital affair, it was the most serious; the two nearly eloped, and Lamb suffered a mental breakdown after Byron ended their romance. Frequent emotional outbursts ostracized her from society, but she was a prolific writer. Her most famous novel, Glenarvon, was published in 1816.

Literary scholars are divided over Lamb’s work. At the time of its publication, it was dismissed as the product of an unstable mind. In recent years, however, some have begun to consider Lamb a gifted author in her own right.

New artistic styles tend to arise in reaction against older, dominant ones, and Romanticism was no exception. Aesthetically, Romanticism was a revolt against the reigning style of the day, Classicism, which itself rejected the previous style, the Rococo or late Baroque. In music and architecture, the Rococo generally favored much ornamentation and exuberance; in art and architecture that exuberance was expressed with asymmetry and great dynamism in color, light and shade, rhythm and movement. More was more. Classicism, as an artistic expression of the Enlightenment, the great intellectual movement spanning the mid seventeenth through the eighteenth centuries that saw the rise of science and rationality, rejected Rococo and looked back to the aesthetic values of Greek and Roman antiquity. It favored balance, harmony, proportion, and restraint. In turn, Romanticism threw off all that order and sought a new way to depict the human condition in a world that was leaving Classical values behind.

As Classicism stood alongside developments in philosophy and science, Romanticism responded not only to a new expressive need but to larger world events. At the end of the eighteenth century, one particular force stood out in Europe: revolution. This was the political and social fact with which Romanticism would become most closely associated.

The French Revolution began in 1789 as a relatively modest appeal for a constitutional monarchy along the lines of Great Britain’s. But the demands of the revolution’s leaders soon became more radical, and other European nations, afraid that the revolutionary fever might spread, declared war on France. As a result of these pressures, in 1792 the French Revolutionary Convention declared France a republic. The following year, Louis XVI and his family were guillotined, and the Wave of Terror began: thousands of people were executed for being merely suspected of harboring nonrepublican sentiments. The next few years were marked more by confusion and chaos than by any kind of government—enlightened, despotic, or anything in between.

Then, in 1799, Napoleon seized command of the French armies, and the real possibility of continent-wide revolution swept Europe for the next dozen years. The other European governments were terrified that Napoleon would bring revolution and the new French empire to their soil. Between 1800 and 1815 they launched a series of wars against him that resulted in his ultimate defeat and death. Although most intellectuals and artists felt betrayed by Napoleon’s establishment of an empire with himself as its unquestioned head, they despised the rest of reactionary Europe more. As a result, many of those who had initially supported Napoleon took up the nationalist and revolutionary sentiments that would dominate much of the rest of the nineteenth century in Europe after Napoleon’s fall in 1815.

Faced with this churning political landscape, it seemed to many artists that the Classical style was worn out. The upheavals sweeping Europe required an art that rejected Classicism’s repose, balance, and harmony, its insistence on decorum and rules. A new art was needed that embraced the whirlwind of change and responded to the new urge for freedom and personal liberty with forms that were equally free, equally individual.

Allied to freedom as a political notion was the idea that art also needed to be free: free of the arbitrary rules of Classicism. In theater, for instance, French Classicism dictated that a play must be written in five acts, in verse, observe the unities of time and place, and keep high emotions tightly in hand. The Romantics rejected all this. The only rules that governed a work of art would be its own that arose organically, products of the pressure of its own demands and the artist’s perception of the world. Personal expression mattered more than arbitrary rules. So, in theater, Shakespeare, with his multiple plots, settings, and scenes, was the preferred Romantic model over French Neoclassicists such as Racine, Corneille, and Voltaire. In general, Romantic playwrights valued character over structure, which—although their ranks included Schiller and, for a time, Goethe—produced a couple decades’ worth of incoherent plays and led in turn to the rise of the non-Romantic, overly coherent well-made play.

The Romantics rejected the Enlightenment’s empiricism and rationality and what was, to them, its puny image of God as a benevolent mechan. They embraced the existence of an Absolute Being who created all things and whose scope was far beyond our limited ability to comprehend. Proof of this being would be located in an instinctive reaction to the universe’s
Infinite variety and beauty, not in the Enlightenment’s verification of objective experience, which the Classical style often reduced to soft colors, geometrical shapes, and amiable harmonies.

Such variety was to be found foremost in nature. The closer a thing was to its natural state the more likely it was to reveal fundamental truths. Landscape painting, therefore, became a pillar of the new movement. While all of nature was its purview, the Romantic imagination wasn’t limited to dappled hillsides or waving fields of sunflowers. It was fascinated more by lashing thunderstorms and rocky landscapes; the stunning power of nature’s dark destructive force became a recurrent subject for Turner, Géricault, Delacroix, and others. In music, Beethoven, followed by Schubert, Schumann, and others, found nature an important inspiration and subject, as did the poets Goethe, Coleridge, and Wordsworth, the last combining with it a belief in the poetic value of everyday people and experience.

From Germany came a new interest in medieval, or Gothic, culture, which celebrated the romance of chivalry. Alongside this love of the Gothic came a fascination with the irrational, the mysterious, the grotesque, the supernatural, all beyond the scope of rationality. The British authors Horace Walpole and Ann Radcliffe were among the earliest to exploit the new allure of night terrors (Walpole as early as 1764); the Gothic tale Wieland, by Charles Brockden Brown, published in 1798, was one of the first American novels, and Edgar Allan Poe carried on the tradition. In 1816, Frankenstein was the result of a ghost-story competition between the author Mary Shelley; her husband, Percy Shelley; Lord Byron; his former lover, Claire Clairmont; and John Polidori, who went on to write one of the first vampire stories in English.

Where Classicists sought unity and balance, the Romantics saw division everywhere and championed the richness of experience it suggested: body vs. soul; temporal vs. eternal; finite vs. infinite. We may yearn for a glimpse of divine truth and perfection, but because it belongs to a realm beyond our understanding, it is forever beyond our grasp. But this fact makes art especially important. It is primarily through art that people can be made whole, since an aesthetic experience frees us from the divisive forces of everyday experience by giving eternal truths a concrete, perceptible form. Art, then, is a key not to mere Enlightenment “improvement,” but to Romantic fulfillment.

If art provides glimpses of eternal truth, it follows that the artist who makes those moments possible is a superior being. Clearly, just as such a being is exempt from the old artistic rules and formal procedures, this person also is exempt from the strictures of social decorum and behavior that apply to ordinary people. Before Romanticism, an artist might be a respected craftsman. Beginning with Romanticism, he was transformed into a different sort of being: divided, difficult, heroic—a genius.
A.C.T. celebrated the opening of The Costume Shop theater in Central Market in 2011. Mayor Ed Lee hailed the venture as “a wonderful example of the spirit that has taken hold on Central Market to transform and infuse the area with art, performance, and gathering spaces.”

This season, A.C.T. has hosted a wide variety of local performing arts organizations in our new experimental performance venue in the Central Market neighborhood, The Costume Shop. Thanks to a partnership with the San Francisco Neighborhoods Arts Collaborative and the Kenneth Rainin Foundation, A.C.T. has offered the space at no charge to an incredible lineup of performances, from such established institutions as Magic Theatre and Lorraine Hansberry Theatre to smaller organizations including Singers of the Street, a community choir of San Franciscans affected by homelessness.

A.C.T.’s ACTsmart education programs not only bring our artists into public schools around the Bay Area, they also connect us with community youth groups such as the Tenderloin Boys & Girls Club, the Mission-based 826 Valencia literary initiative, and Oakland’s Destiny Arts Center. These partnerships help extend the depth and reach of A.C.T.’s programs to youth across the region.

A.C.T. is currently renovating Central Market’s Strand Theater, scheduled to open in 2015 as a new 299-seat theater with a 2,500-square-foot event/performance space, which will also serve as a classroom and meeting hall. Designed to set Market Street aglow, The Strand will be a nucleus for the San Francisco arts community.

Community

While A.C.T. is an internationally recognized institution that has presented world-class theater in San Francisco since 1967, we’ve also been a gathering place for the Bay Area arts community.

Around each of the shows in our subscription season, we also provide a series of InterACT events, from interactive family workshops with theater artists to lively discussions with local experts. These events bring audiences and artists together to meet, mingle, and learn more about the show.

A.C.T. NOW

In addition to our mainstage season, A.C.T. offers a variety of programs that make art accessible to the public, contributing to San Francisco’s thriving arts scene with new venues, new voices, and new ideas. Here’s a peek at some of what’s happening offstage and behind the scenes.

How well do you know A.C.T.?
Access & Education

A.C.T. offers a variety of programs that engage our community in meaningful arts experiences, providing a safe yet dynamic space in which students of all ages can creatively explore social and personal issues. Our education programs aim to empower citizens of today, while developing the artists and audiences of tomorrow.

A.C.T. launched our Student Matinee program in 1968, making it one of the oldest in the country. This affordable and accessible program has since seen more than half a million students attend mainstage and conservatory productions. The experience comes complete with interactive pre- and postshow workshops, lively postshow discussions with the actors, and in-depth study guides.

Each year A.C.T. offers thousands of free tickets and theater-based workshops to social service agencies and community-based organizations in our community, including the Canon Kip Senior Center, La Voz Latina, and Tenderloin Neighborhood Development Corporation, among many others.

Now in its second year, our ACTsmart Intensive Residency program engages youth in San Francisco’s public continuation high schools in theatrical writing and performance. Our residencies provide the skills and opportunity for teenagers from across San Francisco to express their powerful voices through the dramatic art form.

The A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program’s annual Will on Wheels outreach tour brings Shakespeare to schools and community venues across the Bay Area, often performing for youth who have never before experienced a live theater production.

Last summer, A.C.T. piloted Back to the Source, a professional development program for educators who are committed to using theater techniques in the classroom. The week-long intensive allows teachers to immerse themselves in the art of theater to acquire tools to engage students in a variety of subjects using drama techniques. Thanks to the generosity of the Moca Foundation, Bay Area public school teachers receive priority for scholarships, making the program accessible to educators who serve our community.
A.C.T. is committed to nurturing artists from all backgrounds and to presenting stories that reflect the unique cultural landscape of San Francisco, as well as the complex makeup of the global society in which we live.

Whether considering immigration rights (Stuck Elevator), queer politics (Tales of the City; The Normal Heart; "8"), or the birth of the civil rights movement (The Scottsboro Boys), A.C.T. strives to produce work that is relevant to the lives of a broad cross-section of San Francisco and captures the Bay Area’s particular zeitgeist.

In League of Resident Theatre (LORT) professional nonprofit organizations today, women make up just 19 percent of artistic directors and 31 percent of executive directors. With women holding the positions of artistic director, executive director, conservatory director, director of education, and chair of the board of trustees, A.C.T. is leading the charge to more equitable theater leadership.

A.C.T. maintains a number of international partnerships, collaborating and exchanging work across cultures and bringing you perspectives from around the world. In the current and upcoming seasons, A.C.T. has or will work with artists from Italy, France, Scotland, and Canada.
New Works

A.C.T. is committed to illuminating dramatic classics while providing a rich and fruitful home for new plays and new theatrical forms and voices.

This season, A.C.T. produced two world premieres in a 1,000-seat house, something extremely rare in American theater.

Each year, A.C.T. commissions new plays written specifically for the graduate-level students in our M.F.A. Program and the teenage performers in our Young Conservatory.

With the opening of The Strand Theater on Market Street in 2015, A.C.T. will introduce New Strands to increase the visibility of works commissioned, developed, or first produced by A.C.T. The annual New Strands Festival will bring playwrights, musicians, dancers, and multidisciplinary artists together with the public through free workshop presentations and readings.

A portion of our New Strands commissions will be dedicated to works exploring the history and community of San Francisco.

Innovation

A.C.T. is an organization that fosters collaboration and conversation across generations and boundaries throughout the company.

A.C.T. employs a full-time artistic company, including local actors, directors, dramaturgs, and teaching artists. Many of our professional artists mentor young actors both in our Conservatory and in the community. M.F.A. Program students also mentor Young Conservatory students and students in our ACTsmart Intensive Residency programs.

Our M.F.A. Program is designed to train generative artists and gives students the opportunity to experience all aspects of developing and presenting their own work in a professional context.

For more information about A.C.T.’s programs and the role you can play, contact Amory Sharpe at asharpe@act-sf.org or 415.439.2472.

ELLEN RICHARD (Executive Director) joined A.C.T. as executive director in August 2010. She served previously as executive director of off Broadway’s nonprofit Second Stage Theatre in New York City. During her tenure at Second Stage, she was responsible for the purchase contract of the Helen Hayes Theatre and substantial growth in subscription income and growth in individual giving. Under Richard’s leadership, Second Stage provided the initial home for the Broadway productions Everyday Rapture, Next to Normal, and The Little Dog Laughed.

From 1983 to 2005, Richard enjoyed a rich and varied career with Roundabout Theatre Company. By the time she departed as managing director, Roundabout had been transformed from a small nonprofit on the verge of bankruptcy into one of the country’s largest and most successful theater companies of its kind. Richard is the recipient of six Tony Awards as producer, for Roundabout productions of Cabaret (1998), A View from the Bridge (1998), Side Man (1999), Nine (2003), Assassins (2004), and Glengarry Glen Ross (2005). Producer of more than 125 shows at Roundabout, she had direct supervision of all general and production management, marketing, and financial aspects of the theater’s operations. She conceptualized and oversaw the redesign of the three permanent Roundabout stages—Studio 54, the American Airlines Theatre, and the Harold and Miriam Steinberg Center for Theatre. She directed the location search for Cabaret and supervised the creation of that production’s environmental Kit Kat Klub.

Prior to her tenure at Roundabout, Richard served as business manager of Westport Country Playhouse, theater manager for Stamford Center for the Arts, and business manager for Atlas Scenic Studio. She began her career working as a stagehand, sound designer, and scenic artist assistant.

MELISSA SMITH (Conservatory Director) oversees the administration of the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program, Young Conservatory, Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T., in addition to serving as the master acting teacher of the M.F.A. Program. Before joining A.C.T. in 1995, Smith served as director of the program in theater and dance at Princeton University, where she taught acting for six years. She has worked with people of all ages in venues around the country, including teaching in Hawaii and in Florence, Italy. Also a professional actor, she has performed in numerous off-off Broadway plays and at regional theaters, including A.C.T. In 2004 she toured London and Birmingham (U.K.) in Berkeley Repertory Theatre’s production of Continental Divide. Smith holds a B.A. in English and theater from Yale College and an M.F.A. in acting from Yale School of Drama.
A.C.T. raised more than $720,000 to support our conservatory and arts education programs at our 2013 season gala, Time Warp, which took place at The Regency Center in San Francisco. More than 350 guests were treated to a lavish dinner prepared by Mc Calls Catering and Events and an original musical production, Time Warp: The Strand Theater Show, a parody of the cult classic The Rocky Horror Picture Show, featuring performances by YC alumnae Rozzi Crane (currently performing with Maroon 5) and Julia Mattison (Broadway’s Godspell), alongside actors from the M.F.A. Program and YC and members of A.C.T.’s board of trustees. Acclaimed local designer Ken Fulk performed the role of The Narrator.

The evening’s live auction—featuring several one-of-a-kind items, including walk-on roles in A.C.T.’s upcoming productions of 1776 and A Christmas Carol and the naming rights to The Geary Theater’s Sky Bar—and paddle raise brought in a combined total of $218,018.

Says Perloff: “It was a joy at this year’s gala to sense the palpable excitement of everyone in the room to the explosive and generous talent of the young artists who performed and the young people who spoke so movingly in our education department’s video about the impact of A.C.T.’s work on their lives. A huge thank you to the hundreds of amazing donors who stepped up to support the future of the American theater. It was an inspiring evening that put great wind in our sails!”
