It begins with car-to-car research that more accurately reflects real-life collisions. The first crash simulator with pitching capabilities is used to simulate rear-end lift during a crash. And one of the world’s most sophisticated crash barriers helps analyze and improve the distribution of impact forces.

It continues with the Advanced Compatibility Engineering™ (ACE™) body structure that helps maintain the integrity of the passenger cabin during frontal collisions. There are dual-stage airbags and energy-absorbing knee bolsters. The MDX even integrates the Vehicle Stability Assist™ (VSA™) system with Super Handling All-Wheel Drive™ to help reduce the likelihood of a collision happening in the first place. With so many advanced safety features, it’s no surprise that the MDX received a 5-star crash-safety rating from NHTSA™ and was named an IIHS 2009 Top Safety Pick. To learn more, visit acura.com.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training in its conservatory, and an ongoing dialogue with its community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Executive Director Heather Kitchen, A.C.T. embraces its responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent its relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of A.C.T.’s creative work.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the Geary Theater in 1967. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater production and training in 1979. During the past four decades, more than 320 A.C.T. productions have been performed to a combined audience of more than seven million people; today, A.C.T.’s performance, education, and outreach programs annually reach more than 230,000 people in the San Francisco Bay Area. In 1996, A.C.T.’s efforts to develop creative talent for the theater were recognized with the prestigious Jujamcyn Theaters Award. In 2001, to celebrate A.C.T.’s 35th anniversary and Perloff’s 10th season, A.C.T. created a new core company of actors, who have become instrumental in every aspect of its work.

Today A.C.T. is recognized nationally for its groundbreaking productions of classical works and bold explorations of contemporary playwriting. Since the reopening of the Geary Theater (now the American Conservatory Theater) in 1996, A.C.T. has enjoyed a remarkable period of audience expansion and financial stability. In 2001, A.C.T. began producing alternative work at Zeum Theater, which now serves as a venue for student productions and exciting new plays. The company continues to produce challenging theater in the rich context of symposia, audience discussions, and community interaction.

The conservatory, led by Melissa Smith and George Thompson, now serves 3,000 students every year. It was the first actor training program in the United States not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a master of fine arts degree. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Elizabeth Banks are among the conservatory’s distinguished former students. With its commitment to excellence in actor training and to the relationship between training, performance, and audience, the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America’s actor training programs, while serving as the creative engine of the company at large.
Dear Friends,

One of the fascinating things about American dramaturgy is that it is so endlessly various, because our culture is a weave of so many disparate cultural stories. With every new American play we have produced at A.C.T. we have explored a different corner of that tapestry: from the aftermath of the Japanese-American internment camp experience in Philip Kan Gotanda’s After the War to the Midwest–California conflicts in the wake of the Bay Area fires in The Quality of Life. The universe of José Rivera’s Boleros for the Disenchanted is at once totally specific and completely magical. It draws upon the Puerto Rico of José’s childhood in the fifties and travels to the deepest recesses of our hearts.

I first encountered Boleros last season when we were in rehearsals for José’s play Brainpeople at Zeum. Brainpeople was truly a brainteaser, so I was quite astonished to discover how limpid and accessible Boleros is—this is a play wrenched directly from the heart, filled with longing and desire and dreams. The play is clearly autobiographical, beginning with his mother’s multihued memories of the tiny town of Miraflorres in Puerto Rico where José spent his early childhood, and journeying to the bland army base in Dalesville, Alabama, where his parents spent much of their later years. But the play is also a fable, a magical exploration of the astonishing durability of love over a long period of time. It is enormously challenging to represent extended periods of time onstage; that prerogative is usually reserved for the novel. But José has come up with a fascinating structural solution to this quandary: he has written a play with two discrete sections, separated by 39 years, and with two quite distinct tones and qualities. He has said that what interests him most as a writer is the beginnings and endings of things: the first spark of love, for instance, and the last warming glow of its embers. What happens in between is left to our imaginations.

In Boleros, we begin in 1953, when Eusebio and Flora first meet, and then we leap to 1992, when their relationship is tested by illness, betrayal, and age. By a theatrical sleight-of-hand, in Boleros the young become old and their love transforms from the passion of youth into something infinitely more complicated and melancholy and surprising. It’s a complex, transformative journey for the actors, all of whom are making their A.C.T. debuts with this production and each of whom has a very specific personal connection to this material—from Rachel Ticotin, who called her Puerto Rican mother the night before she auditioned to make sure she got the pronunciation right; to Robert Beltran, who grew up in a huge Mexican family in Bakersfield and remembers the charismatics filling his town with religious fervor; to Dion Mucciacito, who was the only kid eating tamales in his elementary school in Alaska. The story of Boleros is both highly specific to the Puerto Rican experience and at the same time totally universal to the American experience: the question of what one gains and what one loses as one leaves one’s culture behind is enormous and never ending.

José has said that “plays are like maps that chart the course of our changes and transformations,” and this particular play travels through territory at once familiar and utterly mysterious. We are asked to consider whether love is destiny or choice, whether commitment is folly or wisdom, whether it is ever possible to predict when love will bloom and when it will die. The play, filled with José’s earthy poetry and wit, is both brutally honest and surprisingly hopeful.

The more you engage with a writer, the more you discover that every piece represents yet another aspect of a multifaceted personality. Part of the pleasure of producing writers on multiple occasions is the chance to watch them grow, and to see new parts of their stories reveal themselves. With Boleros, we are given a generous window onto José Rivera’s rich meditations on marriage, language, trust, and enduring love. I’m thrilled to continue this dialogue with José, and look forward to many more creative outings in the years to come!

Enjoy.

Jose Rivera encourages every playwright to create his or her own genre. This may be why his own dramaturgy is difficult to define. Variously referred to as magical realism, surrealism, “mad realism,” and the theater of “more so,” the style of Rivera expands and contorts the ordinary into something beyond the conventionally “real,” yet still familiar. As A.C.T. audiences saw in last season’s production of Rivera’s Brainpeople, a simple-enough dinner party can quickly unravel into a psychological circus in which anything can happen and anyone—be it any of one character’s multiple personalities or the spirits of the hostess’s deceased parents—can unexpectedly grab the highest trapeze and launch themselves into metaphysical space. When asked to describe his writing, Rivera explains that he creates theater that “lives in the intersection of real and unreal and freely jumps that border in a theatrical way. The plays seek to examine some aspect of society in a way that the artist is given the permission to wander into the world of the unreal or the dreamlike.”

Rivera caught his first break on February 26, 1983—a day he celebrates as an anniversary—when The House of Ramon Iglesia, a play about his parents returning to Puerto Rico after living on Long Island for almost two decades, won a CBS-sponsored playwriting contest. He quit his day job immediately. He had no formal playwriting training, but he had been writing plays since high school, and in college he wrote, produced, and directed a play a year. Since 1983 he has become one of America’s most respected playwrights, earning OBIE awards for Marisol and References to Salvador Dali Make Me Hot and an Academy Award nomination for his film adaptation of The Motorcycle Diaries, while consistently pushing the boundaries of theatricality. In Boleros for the Disenchanted, however, Rivera takes a sabbatical from his exploration of unreality in order to pay homage to the simpler, yet no less dramatic, story of his parents’ marriage.

Puerto Rico in the 1950s still suffered profoundly from the economic repercussions of the Great Depression. At the same time, the cost of air travel between San Juan (Puerto Rico’s capital) and New York City dropped significantly. The outcome was a massive emigration from Puerto Rico to the U.S. mainland. Of the many pilgrims who fled poverty for the American promise were four-year-old Jose Rivera and his parents. In 1959, the family settled on Long Island, where they joined the local working-class community of Italian and Irish Americans. They were not welcomed warmly: Jose’s parents were cursed, firecrackers and rocks were hurled through their windows, and Jose was beaten and bullied at school until he found sanctuary in sports and theater.

Growing up in this atmosphere, he remembers, “forced me to be in my head rather than the real world. The real world wasn’t very pleasant at times.”

Jose’s father worked various odd jobs, supporting his family but never realizing the American ideal of prosperity and security. After 19 years spent raising six children, Jose’s parents returned to Puerto Rico with his three youngest siblings in the late 1970s. They came back to the States when Jose’s father’s health declined. They remained nomadic for a while, living near their children in Ohio, then Georgia, and eventually settling near the Fort Rucker Army Base in Alabama where we catch up with them in Act II of Boleros.

Though Ramon Iglesia and Boleros are the most obvious examples, Rivera often adopts elements of his family’s personal stories for his work. Rivera explains: “My parents came over in the ’50s and they struggled, and nobody in my family went to college except for my sister and me. It feels like if I don’t write these stories, then nobody would know them. These are not people who get written about. Since I am lucky enough to have this ability, this is one way that this kind of person, this kind of family, will not be forgotten. They will live somewhere in the literary memory of this country.”

The week before rehearsals began for A.C.T.’s production of Boleros for the Disenchanted, Rivera spoke to us about what it was like to recreate his parents’ lifelong love story for the stage.

HOW DID THE PROCESS OF CREATING BOLEROS BEGIN FOR YOU?

The events of the first act are stories my mom told me over the years—how she met my father and the circumstances of her life in Puerto Rico in the 1950s. The Act II events I witnessed myself when my parents were living in Alabama. I had wanted to write a play about them for years, but it wasn’t until I put the two acts together in my mind that I knew what the play should be. Once that happened, the writing process happened very fast.

HOW WAS THE EXPERIENCE OF WRITING BOLEROS DIFFERENT FROM WRITING THE HOUSE OF RAMON IGLESLA, WHICH IS ALSO ABOUT YOUR PARENTS?

The plays are separated by 30 years of life and writing experience. When I was writing The House of Ramon Iglesia, I was very aware of the great plays I wanted to emulate. I was reading a lot of Chekhov and O’Neill. Ramon Iglesia took a long time because I was just learning the craft of playwriting and I was very self-conscious about what I was doing. Whereas by the time I wrote Boleros, that craft was already innate to me, part of my unconscious process. I didn’t feel like I needed to search for form. So in that way, this play was a lot easier to write, even though emotionally the events of Boleros were much harder to deal with.

WHY WAS THAT?

Well Act I wasn’t, but Act II—with the decline of my parents and seeing the situation my father was in—was more difficult, and because my mom is still living I knew she would see the play, so I wanted to be respectful of her yet I wanted to be honest about what really happened. I stressed a lot about what she would think about it.

DID SHE ENJOY IT?

Yes, she did. I had sent it to her first to read, and then I took her to a rehearsal and the opening at Yale [Repertory Theatre] and the opening in Boston [at the Huntington Theatre Company]. I really wanted to get her prepared. It was tough: she was literally shaking with emotion at one point in rehearsal, especially the scene where the young soldier appears on the street corner and plays the jukebox, which is the same music my father played for her. It was just a lot of emotion to deal with. And of course Act II is really hard for her to watch. But ultimately the play is a celebration of her, her strength and her commitment to being with my father.

DID SHE EVER GIVE YOU NOTES CORRECTING YOU ON THE WAY THINGS REALLY HAPPENED?

She did give me one note. I couldn’t believe it: she didn’t like the name “Flora” for her character. [Laughter] She doesn’t like that name for some reason. So I asked her, “What would you call her?” And she said, “Nancy.” I said, “Nancy doesn’t sound very Puerto Rican!” I don’t know where she got Nancy, but she liked that name better than Flora. I like Flora. It’s a perfect name for that character.

THE FORM OF BOLEROS IS, IRONICALLY, EXPERIMENTAL FOR YOU, IN THAT IT IS MORE GROUNDED IN THE RULES OF REALISM THAN YOUR OTHER PLAYS. WHAT WAS THE EXPERIENCE LIKE, CREATING A MORE “CONVENTIONAL” PLAY?

I guess you could say it has a traditional well-made-play structure, and I’ve always shied away from that form because it never seemed challenging enough. I’ve always thought that contemporary theater should be more theatrical than we normally experience it. But I found while working on it that it is much more challenging than it looks. Its simplicity is a challenge. Being able to write with more subtext and to have every moment be psychologically plausible and emotionally honest—that’s not easy to get to. It’s not like my other work.

WERE YOU EVER TEMPTED TO ALLOW THE WORLD TO BECOME FANTASTICAL?

Not really, but I did allow, at least in some passages, the language itself to be rich and lovely and magical. There are a few (not many) passages where I just let the characters go, and they speak in a way that you wouldn’t hear in real life.

YOU ENCOURAGE PLAYWRIGHTS TO WRITE FROM ALL OF THE SENSES, NOT JUST THE BRAIN. WHEN DOES THE BRAIN COME INTO YOUR PROCESS?

It’s early. I do feel I need a philosophical underpinning to the work so that I am not just writing theater but I am also presenting a thesis or some kind of point of view on life. Then that gets abandoned and I write from the other senses to make it as visual as possible, to make the language sing as much as possible, to make it an experience for the gut and the heart. Early in the process is where I do most of my “thinking,” and then that gets abandoned for something else. When we’re in rehearsal during table work, a lot of the ideas in the play get expressed because the actors and directors ask about them. It’s funny because I’m forced to reexamine some of the ideas I had forgotten about.

WHEN YOU CREATED PUERTO RICO IN THE FIRST ACT, WERE YOU WORKING FROM YOUR OWN MEMORIES OR WERE YOU WORKING LARGELY OFF THE STORIES FROM YOUR FAMILY?

The truth is, those little towns don’t change a lot. I was in Puerto Rico during the rehearsal period of the New Haven production, and I went back to the little town where my mom lived, and it still feels the same from my memory of being [there when I was] four years old. Certain things change: the houses are bigger and people are better fed, but kids who don’t have cars ride horses wherever they need to go, bareback; people still have animals—goats, horses, chickens, cows—and pluck mangoes out of the trees. So there are a lot of similarities. The play is a mixture of my memories, my mother’s memories, some fiction, some invention on my part. The dialogue of 1953 was invented; obviously I wasn’t there. My mom was very loquacious, but my dad wasn’t, so the young soldier in Act I is much more of a speaker than my father ever was.

YOU CONSISTENTLY WRITE ABOUT THE PUERTO RICAN EXPERIENCE IN AMERICA. HOW DOES BOLEROS FIT INTO THAT CONVERSATION?

A lot of plays deal with the postmigration experience in the United States and what that did to Puerto Ricans who lived here: the promise of the New World, the myth of America, and what people did to provide for their families. Act II is the crushing reality of what that myth ended up becoming. It is a migration story.

In a lot of my plays the central characters are yearning for home and yearning to belong. A lot of characters are without family, rootless, disconnected. I find that very theatrically interesting and [that it] reflects the Puerto Rican experience because we are from a country that is not a country: it is a territory of the United States without sovereignty. We are a people without a country.

DURING THESE DIFFICULT ECONOMIC TIMES, WHAT DO YOU THINK THE PRIORITIES OF THEATER NEED TO BE?

I think it’s the old cliché from Hamlet about holding up a mirror to nature. It is more urgent than ever to be socially responsible and to talk about the important issues of the period. I would hate to see the theater use this as an excuse to get safer and more escapist. I think it is a time to be bold and bring audiences into an experience they are not going to get elsewhere. There is no substitute for the live event. There is that feeling that—even if you know the play, and even though you know it’s scripted—maybe this is really happening in front of us. It has never happened before. There is no way to predict the next moment. When theater is working on all cylinders, there is a thrill of going into the unknown with a group of people.

After serving on the boards of regional theaters in Dallas, Texas, and Taos, New Mexico, they wanted to get involved in theater in the Bay Area, where they made their permanent home in 1998. Rusty, former CEO of the digital music commerce company SNOCAP and executive vice president of Electronic Arts (EA), joined the A.C.T. Board of Trustees in 2003 and now co-chairs the Committee on Trustees and Governance. Patti is a former special events consultant. WHAT IT MEANS TO BE AN A.C.T. PRODUCER

The process of bringing a play—particularly new work—to the stage is a complex, challenging, and ultimately deeply gratifying experience for all involved. At A.C.T. an essential component of that process is the support provided by members of the A.C.T. Producers Circle, whose generosity enables A.C.T. to bring innovative, groundbreaking productions to our stage. Executive producers—like A.C.T. Trustee Rusty Rueff, who with his wife, Patti, has produced six A.C.T. productions—also have the opportunity to participate in every stage of the creative process. Rueff explains what the experience means to him:

“Regardless of the medium—whether it be visual or performing arts—our ‘thing’ is to see the creative process unfold and come to life. What I have learned over the years is that what happens throughout that process—from the first reading of a play by the cast and director (and sometimes in the presence of the playwright), through studio rehearsals, into previews and opening night, and sitting in the booth to hear the stage manager ‘call the show’—is the creation of magic. What starts as something so rough and raw that it seems unimaginable that it will ever make it successfully to ‘the big stage’ ultimately comes alive and pulls together on opening night, and real magic is created. And as producers we can bask in being a part of that process.

“At the annual A.C.T. gala someone asked me, ‘What do you get out of executive producing?’ The answer came easy: We receive the intrinsic reward of being ‘noncreatives’ who can be a part of bringing to life a production that is unique and special for the audience and the actors.”

MELISSA SMITH (Conservatory Director) oversees the administration of the A.C.T. Dear Friends,

From that first moment I stepped onto the A.C.T. stage in The Black Rider five years ago, I knew I had found a home—a place where artists and audiences can come to know each other over time and together can take risks and share experiences. I am constantly inspired and challenged here to find truth in my work, whether I’m performing onstage or mentoring students in our conservatory.

A.C.T. is breaking new ground in the American theater—an accomplishment that would not be possible without the generosity of A.C.T.’s Annual Fund contributors. With each new production, we strive to make theater that matters, that is bold and exciting, heartfelt and passionate. For me, where else but A.C.T. would I be given the chance to dance with a prima ballerina from San Francisco Ballet?

Your support breathes life into everything we do here. During these difficult times, the opportunity that live theater provides to lose ourselves in the moment of the play, to come together as a community and gain new perspectives, is more vital than ever. Please consider making a contribution to A.C.T. with your subscription, single ticket purchase, or online at www.act-sf.org and help us keep A.C.T. a thriving part of the Bay Area. We can’t do it without you.

Sincerely,

Jack Willis
A.C.T. Core Acting Company

P.S. As an Annual Fund donor, you are invited to join us for upcoming behind-the-scenes tours of the A.C.T. Prop and Scene Shop (May 14) and Costume Shop (May 21). At the Theater
A.C.T. is located at 415 Geary Street. The lobby opens one hour before curtain. Bar service and refreshments are available one hour before curtain. The auditorium opens 30 minutes before curtain.

Refreshments
Full bar service, sweets, and savory items are available one hour before the performance in Fred’s Columbia Room on the lower level and the Sky Bar on the third level. There is also a minibar in the main lobby. You can avoid the long lines at intermission by preordering food and beverages in the lower- and third-level bars. Bar drinks are now permitted in the auditorium.

Cell Phones!
If you carry a pager, beeper, cellular phone, or watch with alarm, please make sure that it is set to the “off” position while you are in the theater. Text messaging during the performance is very disruptive and not allowed.

Perfumes
The chemicals found in perfumes, colognes, and scented after-shave lotions, even in small amounts, can cause severe physical reactions in some individuals. As a courtesy to fellow patrons, please avoid the use of these products when you attend the theater.

A.C.T. performances begin on time. Latecomers will be seated before the first intermission only if there is an appropriate interval.

Listening Systems
Headsets designed to provide clear, amplified sound anywhere in the auditorium are available free of charge in the lobby before performance. Please turn off your hearing aid when using an A.C.T. headset, as it will react to the sound system and make a disruptive noise.

Photographs and recordings of A.C.T. performances are strictly forbidden.

Rest Rooms
Restrooms are located in Fred’s Columbia Room on the lower lobby level, the Balcony Lobby, and the Garret on the uppermost lobby level.

Wheelchair Seating is available on all levels of the theater. Please call 415.749.2ACT in advance to notify the house staff of any special needs.
