The AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER is a Tony Award-winning nonprofit theater in which professional training and production are inextricably linked to create work that aspires to the highest standards of American performance. Under the recent leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff, A.C.T. is committed to nurturing its rich legacy while expanding its reach into new communities and new areas of dramatic literature. Central to A.C.T.'s work is the interaction of original and classical work on our stages and at the heart of our Conservatory.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the historic Geary Theater in 1967. During the theater's twenty-nine year history, more than two hundred productions have been performed to a combined audience of six million people in Japan, the U.S.S.R., and throughout the United States. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation as a leading theater and training company, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. From 1986 to 1992, A.C.T. experienced a period of rejuvenation and growth under the leadership of Artistic Director Edward Hastings.

Today, A.C.T. continues to fulfill the expectations of Bay Area audiences as a company of national and international recognition with performance, education, and outreach programs that annually reach more than two hundred thousand people in the San Francisco Bay Area.

From the beginning, A.C.T.'s philosophy has called for the union of superior repertory performance and intensive actor training. Its Conservatory, now serving fifteen hundred students every year, was the first training program not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a Master of Fine Arts degree and is a model for the continued vitality of the art form. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among its distinguished former students.

The eighty-four-year-old Geary Theater, which was damaged in the San Francisco earthquake of 1989, is undergoing major renovation that will result in updated stagecraft, improved patron amenities—including improved seating and sight lines, greater accessibility for the physically disabled, and expanded lounge and restroom facilities—and a total seismic restructuring. A.C.T. anticipates opening a refurbished, state-of-the-art performance space during the 1995-96 season. To date, A.C.T.'s capital campaign has raised $22 million of the funds necessary to complete the reconstruction.
Come to A.C.T. for the most entertaining education in town. A.C.T. offers several ways for you to learn more about the season's productions and to express your views on the issues they raise:

A.C.T. Prologues
Sponsored by the Junior League of San Francisco, these lively one-hour presentations are conducted by noted actors, directors, and designers who introduce each new A.C.T. play. Prologues are held before the Tuesday preview of every production at 5:30 p.m. in the same theater as the evening's performance.

Audience Exchanges
This post-show discussion forum began last season with A.C.T.'s acclaimed production of Oleanna, David Mamet's explosive examination of sexual harassment. These informal, anything-goes sessions are a great way to share your feelings with fellow theatergoers. Audience Exchanges take place for thirty minutes immediately after selected performances and are moderated by A.C.T. staff members.

A.C.T. Perspectives
This popular series of free public symposia, offered for the first time last season, is back in 1994-95 from 7 to 9 p.m. on selected Monday evenings throughout the season. Each symposium features a panel of scholars, theater artists, and professionals exploring topics ranging from aspects of the season's productions to the intersection of theater and the arts with American culture. Everyone is welcome—you need not have seen a play to attend.

“Words on Plays”
In response to our many patrons who have asked to receive program notes in advance, this season for the first time A.C.T. offers you the chance to study up on coming plays. Each audience handbook contains a synopsis of the play and background information about the playwright and the social and historical context of the work. A subscription for six handbooks is available by mail to full-season subscribers for $24; a limited number of copies of handbooks for individual plays are also available for purchase by single-ticket holders at the A.C.T. Central Box Office, located at 405 Geary Street at Mason, for $5 each.

Briton David Storey is an accomplished man of letters. Regarded as one of the most prolific and widely acclaimed postwar playwrights of Britain's "Second Wave," Storey is to date the author of fourteen plays, eight novels, a volume of poetry and three screenplays. His novels have won Britain's prestigious Booker Prize (Saville, 1976), the Macmillan Prize (This Sporting Life, 1960, his first), and the Somerset Maugham Prize (Flight into Camden, 1960). His play In Celebration (1969) has been translated into thirty languages. Home, Storey's fourth play, was first produced in 1970 and, like his The Changing Room, received both a New York Drama Critics' Circle Award and a Tony nomination.

David Storey's first encounter with the theater came at age nine. With his older brother he journeyed twelve miles to see a production of Hamlet at the Grand Theatre in Leeds. "All I recall," he writes in the introduction to the published version of Home, "is one character searching for another along a row of canvas arches, I resisting the temptation to call out that the object of the search was visible to all of us (reading a book) downstage. How absurd it all seemed—and irritating. Pretext." The boys missed the last bus and returned home hours later to find that their parents, sick with worry, had phoned the police to report them missing. "Much agitation when we arrived: relief, recrimination—or, what might have been missing earlier, the previous evening, in my view: drama."

Born the third son of a miner in 1933, Storey grew up in the northern community of Wakefield on a housing estate bounded at either end by a colliery. At his parents' insistence, he studied hard for the grammar school exams to escape the arduous mining life it was very likely he would inherit. "My parents determined that their children shouldn't go into coal mining. My father described it as 'working like a rat in a hole,' and he certainly didn't want his children to follow on from that."

Storey was accepted at a grammar school, but his break with fate would subsequently exact its own prices, including an unexpected level of estrangement from his family—a dislocation he has examined in many of his novels (particularly Saville) and plays. The characters of In Celebration, he says, suffer because "their emotional affiliations are to the working class, but their intellectual and professional affiliations are very much towards the middle class." Once at school, Storey also found that the rigid expectations of the British class system still pertained, even though he had "elevated" himself to the educated world. "We were all embarked on the same rails, ones which were going to carry us to a predetermined end—that is, we'd all end up as schoolteachers or professionals of some sort."

Disenchanted, he chose to become an artist, quitting school at seventeen and telling his parents that rather than attend the university he would enroll in art school—an announcement that did not go over well. "My father and mother thought that the notion of being an artist was a waste of their efforts: an artist was someone who lived and worked in a garret and produced an object which was only vicariously connected with life. Financially they washed their hands of me, though not emotion-ally. They said it didn't seem reasonable for them to go on supporting me."

Fortunately, Storey had considerable athletic talent which he could exploit to fund his struggling artistic career. He signed a fourteen-year contract with a professional rugby team from Leeds—the basis for both his first novel, This Sporting Life, and his acclaimed portrait of a day-in-the-life of a rugby team, The Changing Room (1971). Two years later he won a scholarship to the prestigious Slade school and began to commute between rugby in Leeds and painting in London.

In 1956 he finished at Slade, bought himself out of the remaining years of the rugby contract, and started to teach art. During the period from 1952 to 1960, Storey wrote seven novels and numerous short stories and essays; all were rejected time and again. In 1958, coming home to find yet another rejection slip for what would later become This Sporting Life, Storey began to wonder whether he was wasting his time with fiction. "I thought I could write a play over a half-term week-end, and get down everything I felt about my situation then: it wouldn't take long, since there was only dialogue, and a play didn't require the descriptive passages of a novel." The play he wrote was about a teacher at the end of his rope: the hero of To Die with the Philistines, Arnold Middleton, goes mad and commits suicide. Storey himself went on teaching for two more years before a publisher finally accepted This Sporting Life. With the two novels that quickly followed—Flight into Camden and Radcliffe (1963)—Storey's reputation as an emerging new writer was solidified, and he joined fellow Northerners in making a name for their region as a source of Britain's new artistic talent.

A proposal to make a screen version of This Sporting Life brought Storey in contact with Lindsay Anderson—then an up-and-coming filmmaker and director himself. A friendship and artistic partnership began that would last for many fruitful years until Anderson's death in September, 1994 at the age of seventy-one. Anderson would direct nearly all of Storey's plays at the Royal Court Theatre, long after the film version of This Sporting Life launched his own successful career as a British filmmaker. During the filming, Anderson asked Storey if he'd written anything for the theater. When Storey showed him To Die with the Philistines, Anderson made plans to mount the play at the Royal Court (where he had recently put up two successful productions) as a "warm up" to making a film of it. The production was ultimately shelved, however, because of complicated scheduling conflicts between the star, Richard Harris, the film crew, and producers. While Storey struggled to get Philistines produced elsewhere, the film of This Sporting Life won over audiences worldwide, and brought Anderson and Storey greater notoriety, and the movie's leads, Richard Harris and Rachel Roberts, Oscar nominations.

His newfound fame put Storey in an unusual position: he was routinely pressed with invitations to abandon what he had worked so hard to accomplish and "move on." "I got offered a five-film contract with the BBC and the chance to do a feature film and was suddenly faced with the decision of whether I wanted to be a director or a writer. After a lot of anguish, I decided I'd stick with writing."

To Die with the Philistines was finally produced at Edinburgh's Traverse Theatre in 1966—eight years after he'd composed it in total despair. The play was revised, the suicide ending cut, and the title changed to The Restoration of Arnold Middleton. Its debut at the Royal Court the next year was followed by a production in the West End in 1967—the year Storey and Tom Stoppard shared the Evening Standard's Most Promising Playwright Award. Seeing Arnold Middleton produced inspired Storey to take up writing for the stage once more, and, nurtured by William Gaskill's "writer's theater"—the English Stage Company at the Royal Court—he wrote a series of plays in rapid succession. "It was as if a dam had burst," he says of that time. "None of the plays took me more than five days to write and, once written, none required more than nominal correction. . . . From my own point of view the Royal Court did seem an actual home, the atmosphere and the personnel I found very conducive to writing all the plays and then producing them in that particular milieu."

One of the works that came from this fit of inspiration was Home. "The play started from the end of the one I wrote previously to it, which was called The Contractor, about constructing a marquee on stage for a wedding celebration, its sort of violation and then its disassembly. At the end of that play there was just a wide metal work table on the stage and the tent poles on which the canvas is hauled up during the action, and it struck me that it was like the beginning of a play rather than the end. So I then brought out a white metal work table and two metal work chairs and realized someone would have to come in and sit on one of them and he can't sit very long before someone has to come and say something to him—it really began in that practical way, connecting experience the refined intellectual language pieces of T.S. Eliot and Christopher Fry; taboos and sensibilities were respected. Look Back in Anger broke no new stylistic ground—it followed traditional plot structure and logical realism (Osborne later said it was "a formal, rather old-fashioned play")—but it disrupted the theater world with its strong emotional force, its contemporary (but not vulgar) language, and its portrayal of Britain as a declining international power, wrought by economic malaise in the aftermath of World War II. Stoppard, Harold Pinter, and Joe Orton emerged from this first wave as the most visible writers of many to come.

The Second Wave is said to have begun around 1967 with Stoppard’s Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead (also at A.C.T. this season), which opened up theater to more stylistic experimentation from a host of new, predominately university-educated working-class writers like Storey. But like any author, Storey did not consciously consider himself to be part of any movement at the time. "When I wrote [Home] I had very little experience with the theater at all," he says. "I really started off as a novelist and came to plays rather late in my career, in my thirties, so I wasn’t really aware of what was current in the theater. I certainly noticed when I got going in the theater that there were other writers appearing simultaneously, but the majority of them seemed to have been actually working in the theater themselves either as actors or as trainee writers for quite a while, and they all had a fairly solid background of theatrical training and theatrical experience."

Since the Second World War, British playwriting has become characterized by works that possess an increasingly greater polemical force. "No other western country has reflected a social revolution and a sense of doom so strongly in its theater," writes Oleg Kerensky in an essay placing Storey’s work in the context of Britain’s long theatrical history. Storey says this political sensibility is also reflected in comparisons between the British novel and the American novel. "Life is so dynamic in America. It’s very difficult over here to have that kind of eye which is braced and focused by such a dynamic world. That sort of world doesn’t exist in this country, which is very much a decaying world—I would suspect it’s a bit like Home... the sun going down. I can understand that in a questing society, which is what American society is, to question in a radical way is difficult—I think it’s always been difficult for American writers—because in their hearts they’re committed to the evolving society... which is right, and they should be. And to criticize it too severely, say in the way that Europeans or someone like Beckett criticizes molecular living, is not in their schedule, as it were. The dynamic of the society they’re living in is one that’s evolving and they’re trying to evolve with it. So the hard edge of inquiry is very blunted by good will."

Unlike many of his British contemporaries, Storey does not... approach his own writing from a polemical, political, or social agenda. "I've attempted several times to construct a magnificent thesis for a play, a rationale for it and a theme of great importance," he says, "and when I've worked on that for a little while and then sat down to write, it's always been an illustration rather than an organic thing. The only plays of mine that have worked, really, have been plays that start with a first line, like the metal work table: What happens next? Well, there's a chair. There's no preconception at all that I can recall of any of the plays that actually work. It's just writing line by line."

Storey is perhaps more accurately placed in the company of other "poetic realist" writers like Beckett, Pinter, and Chekhov. His work has always sought to expose the quiet, seemingly mundane interiors of life, which become in his pared-down and highly concentrated style more penetrating than any amount of bombast, sensationalism, or agitprop. "You end up with a lot of polemical theater which is limited in its interest beyond its own time," he says of the current British theater. "Some of it is consciously designed in that way; in other words, it's designed more like a newspaper—not to be read tomorrow."

Home falls into one of Storey's own three informal classifications for his plays. There are his "traditional plays of relationships": In Celebration, The Farm (1973), and The March on Russia (1989). His "work plays": The Contractor, Life Class (1974), and The Changing Room. And lastly his "more overtly poetic" works: Home and the not-so-successful Cromwell (1973).

The canon of Storey's plays shows his obsession with groups and their ability to unify disparate people in a common routine. Within this canon, Home is most distinguished by its intimate perspective. One critic, comparing the play to Storey's other works, captured Home's boiled-down quality: "In [Home] . . . the picture is more abstract and more poetic. . . . The atmosphere—well caught in the bare setting—is gentler and more muted."

and am much less interested in reading fiction—which is quite a significant shift. I'm not quite sure what it means, and I've actually found myself writing more poetry now. I've put together two books of poetry of rather formidable length; whether they are purely from self-indulgence or not remains to be seen."

He is also waiting to see what the future holds for the arts. "I think it's a difficult period now for younger writers because the great creative dynamic of the century has waned for painting, sculpture, literature, theater, and music, and we're in a cultural trough before the next great revolutionary wave comes—and it eventually will. But the difficulty is trying to elucidate or identify connections with the implicit dynamic that's going to raise the next wave—having seen the giants now disappear in the trough."

Storey the Playwright, Storey the Novelist

Storey is often asked to hold forth on many variations of the topic, "Fiction versus Theater." Writing a novel, he says, is like "launching an unmanned ship." A play, he adds, "is like a properly crewed ship: you can modify from moment to moment, take account of the climate of feeling at any particular performance, test out ideas, and if they don't work as you want them to, change them."

But the process of deciding whether a new idea will become a play, piece of fiction, or even poetry, Storey says, is rather mysterious. "[Each new project] usually pops up itself rather than my sitting down with the predetermined intention to write one or the other. They really formulate themselves, rather irritably so: I'm in their hands, rather than me laying down the odds."

On the whole I write every day. What I write seems to be determined elsewhere, but the actual labor of writing I'm very keen to do each day, and then I wait to see what turns up. I think I probably publish only about a third of what I've written. . . . It's a wasteful way of working."

Today, Storey is at work on an anthology of his work, another novel, and the exploration of poetry. "I've found as I've got older that I've moved much more towards reading poetry.
The First Home

Home premiered at London's Royal Court Theatre in June 1970, featuring Sir John Gielgud, Sir Ralph Richardson (the “two knights”), Dandy Nichols, and Mona Washbourne. When it came to Broadway in the fall of that year, the Wall Street Journal declared: “Quite simply, it is the most extraordinary piece of theater in years.” Another reviewer seemed to breathe an almost audible sigh of relief with, “At a time when very few writers have a sense of modern visual-reality, and even fewer can find a way of applying language to it, Storey could not be more badly needed or more gladly welcomed.”

Both Storey and Home’s director, Storey’s longtime friend and collaborator Lindsay Anderson, have vivid memories of that landmark first production.

Anderson: When we sent [Gielgud] the play, to my amazement, the very next day the casting director at the Court came in with a big grin on her face and said, “Gielgud wants to do it! He thinks it’s terribly funny!” Then David and I met Gielgud and found that he just instinctively wanted to do the play. He did think it was very funny and that’s about it. He hadn’t really gone into how tricky it was—but perhaps that’s how the best decisions are always made.

Storey: The beginning of rehearsals was like watching two horses galloping along while, perched on a delicately fashioned carriage roof, a driver called out, “Whoa! Stop!” Finally turning to his fellow passenger and saying, wryly, “Well, we’d better let them have a run . . .”

Anderson: It was during rehearsals that both John and Ralph became extremely frightened: they realized what they’d let themselves in for. They were great actors, but this was a new thing and it was naturally scary. Ralph would come into rehearsal taking off his crash helmet (he rode his motorbike down to the Court) and he would announce, “Oh, I decided to withdraw from the play. I woke up in the middle of the night, I was having nightmares. I can’t possibly do it. But my wife said, ‘Go on, don’t be an old fool. Go on. Get down there.’ So I’m here.”

Storey: It was a strange experience really because the two knights at that point were feeling very much that the theater had moved beyond them—they didn’t really know where they were in terms of a career. They both belonged to an Edwardian tradition of the theater (if there ever was such a thing) and the Royal Court was certainly Brechtian-oriented at that time and belonged to a more contemporary humanist tradition—one in which the audience was there to be instructed rather than entertained. But the two knights had obviously been brought up in a world where it’s the actor’s privilege to entertain the audience. So that tension was very clearly defined when we began rehearsals, but it was a positive experience all the way through to see two remarkable actors evolving as it were into something that they suspected they were not. And of course afterwards their careers took off quite pleasantly and they found their place again.

. . . What I think was particularly fruitful was the bonding of two traditions which at the time seemed very wide apart: the postwar British theatrical tradition, which seemed to be rather more robust and certainly consciously—if not otherwise—entertained social issues in a way that the prewar British theater didn’t. And to find that the prewar tradition and the postwar tradition could certainly be bridged and brought together in that particular production I think was probably its most rewarding element.
 MEMORY—That Strange Deceiver

You have to begin to lose your memory, if only in bits and pieces, to realize that memory is what makes our lives. Life without memory is no life at all. . . . Our memory is our coherence, our reason, our feeling, even our action. Without it, we are nothing. . . . (I can only wait for the final amnesia, the one that can erase an entire life, as it did my mother's.)

—Luis Buñuel

He is, as it were . . . isolated in a moment of being, with a moat or lacuna of forgetting all round him. . . . He is man without a past (or future), stuck in a constantly changing, meaningless moment.

—From The Man Who Mistook His Wife for a Hat, by Oliver Sacks (© 1985, Simon & Schuster)

If we wish to know about a man, we ask “what is his story—his real, innermost story?—for each of us is a biography, a story. . . . For here is a man who, in some sense, is desperate, in a frenzy. The world keeps disappearing, losing meaning, vanishing—and he must seek meaning, make meaning, in a desperate way, continually inventing, throwing bridges of meaning over abysses of meaninglessness, the chaos that yawns continually beneath him.

Before you experience the performance of a Mercedes, we put it through some pretty grueling dress rehearsals.

Finally, a new concept in seating... comes to life.

The Concept.
Reinvent the car seat. Engineer it. Make it fit virtually everybody. And virtually every size body.

The Car.
To make it happen, our engineers started from the inside out. The optional lumbar support became a flexible strap that electromechanically adjusts to individual body contours. For true comfort, the foam was placed to eliminate uncomfortable pressure points, then joined to the seat frame rather than laid over it. Finally the seat was tested. By hundreds of people who drove over 100,000 miles. The long and short of it? A car seat that fits. Virtually every body. The all-new 1995 Riviera by Buick. What a concept.

Performance Highlights

Presented by CHRYSLER

The American Conservatory Theater's production of Home, by British playwright David Storey, brings together a quartet of local legends. Ruth Kobart, Joy Carlin, Raye Birk, and William Paterson, the play's four leads, represent thirteen decades of theater experience among them. All have a history with A.C.T. as well: Carlin is a former associate artistic director; Birk made his acting debut with A.C.T. in 1973; while Paterson and Kobart took their first bows at A.C.T. in 1967. Artistic director Carey Perloff, who directs the production, has had Home in mind since coming to A.C.T. in 1992, "but the icing on the cake was the thought of these tremendous actors working together on this moving script." Performances at the Stage Door Theatre through December 4.

San Francisco Symphony Youth Orchestra, the much-lauded ensemble whose members range from age 12 to 20. The Youth Orchestra performs Don Juan, along with Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, and, as an ear-opening prelude, "Double Music," a 1941 work by John Cage and Lou Harrison written for twin percussion quartets.

Anybody in the market for a distinctive mode of transportation might want to stop at the Hyatt Regency on November 4 for Opera Festiva, the San Francisco Opera Guild's annual gala dinner and auction. Items on the block include a 1995 BMW convertible, a two-year-old Arabian stallion, and lunch aboard an aircraft carrier with the world famous Blue Angels. For those who prefer the comforts of home, fine wines, antiques, and art are also in the offering. All proceeds from the event go to fund the Guild's numerous education programs. Another gala, in honor of tenor Plácido Domingo and to benefit the Opera itself, is held on November 20, following an afternoon performance of Hérodiade, featuring Domingo as John the Baptist in Massenet's seldom-heard version of the Herodias-Salome-St. John story. The gala begins at 6 p.m. with a cocktail reception in the lobby, and moves on to a lavish Roman banquet held on the stage, where guests can get a close look at Gerald Howland's elaborate set, built for the new production.

The Center for Advanced Automotive Design is now open for family tours.

Not only was it developed at one of the most advanced vehicle research and development facilities in the world, but each Chrysler Concorde is in itself something of a mobile design center. Begin with a walk around the grounds. Note the wind-cheating profile of its innovative cab-forward design—longer wheelbase, wider track, aggressively raked windshield. As you step in, observe the enlarged rear doors, the easier entry and exit. Once inside the spacious interior, take a hands-on tour of ergonomically placed controls. (Don't miss the dual front air bags; they're standard.) And a spectrum of noise-buffering components is at the ready to keep the peace as the whole family takes the road tour. Your guides will be Concorde's powerful V6 engine and advanced four-speed automatic transmission. For more tour information, see your local Chrysler-Plymouth dealer, or call 1-800-4-A-CHRYSLER.

A.C.T.'s Home Improvement

During his days as a Broadway stage manager and production stage manager of A.C.T. plays that toured the country, Producing Director James Haire worked in hundreds of theaters across America; few, he'll tell you, compare with the Geary Theater's majesty or its near-perfect stage-to-audience relationship. "The Geary is one of the most intimate and spectacular theatrical environments in the country for a house its size," he says. "There really is no place like it."

Built in 1909, long before the days of complex special-effects systems, the thirteen-hundred-seat theater enhanced performances on its stage for more than half a century. Now, five years after the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake, the Geary is undergoing a thorough seismic and technological renovation that will bring its stage technology into the twenty-first century and provide patrons with increased comfort and safety.

Haire is quick to caution, however, that none of the manifold improvements will alter the theater's existing character or superior architecture. "As far as the auditorium is concerned," he says, "the only differences audience members will notice is that their seats have more leg room and plush new cushions, there are a lot more bathrooms to choose from, and the balcony-level windows once again look out on Geary Street."

The massive project will take more than a year to complete and involves many players. The architectural firm of Esherick, Homsey, Doge, and Davis acted as preliminary conceptual and schematic...
Hard Hats, Shear Walls, and Fresh Treads

The first phase of the restoration, already underway, calls for hard hats, since workers are getting most of the building's interior, especially what was damaged by the earthquake. They are pulling out and refurnishing all of the orchestra seating, stairs, stair wells, and auditorium floor. A diagonal truss that supports the rear section of the first balcony will be replaced with horizontal bracing to create a double-height grand lobby in the main foyer. Lastly, the walls, ceilings, and finishes of the front foyers are being demolished to make space at the rear of the orchestra section for a concrete shear wall that runs from basement to roof.

Construction of the shear wall represents the second phase of the renovation. Connected to the Geary Street facade with steel braces and providing lateral resistance on the theater's east-west plane, it is the core of the building's new seismic restructuration. The south wall will also be reinforced with concrete-encased steel girders and the proscenium wall with concrete fortification along its base and entire height.

In the third and final phase, the rest rooms and lobby below the orchestra section (Fred's Columbia Room) will be extended back toward the rear of the building, and new lobbies, rest rooms, and a conference room will be added to the upper balconies. The orchestra level gets a new carpet and contoured seats, which will be placed in a staggered pattern to improve sight lines and leg room. Stairwells will receive fresh treads, wainscoting, and plaster walls and ceilings. Wheelchair access and seating will be made available at every level of the auditorium in compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act. Last, but definitely not least, more toilets will be installed in each rest room.

Outside, the delicate terra cotta patterns on the Geary Street facade will be cleaned and restored to their original elegance. The east and west alleyways will become enclosed exit corridors with stairs, ramps, and lighting. The Geary also gets a new roof, strong enough to support new heating, ventilation, and emergency power equipment. The building next door at 333 Mason Street—known as the Annex—will be rebuilt into a four-story, reinforced-concrete structure, providing the Geary with mechanical equipment access, additional storage space, dressing rooms for up to sixty actors, wardrobe facilities, and new production offices.

"A Box of Parts"

Some of the most exciting changes to the Geary involve its stage technology. The guiding concepts for the work are flexibility and interchangeable parts, or, as Bob Scales of Theater Projects Consultants says, "turning the stage into a box of parts." The permanently raked stage will be rebuilt into separate, modular sections, three-feet-by-six-feet, which can be removed, stacked as risers, made into trap doors, or used to hide smoke machines and other instruments of theatrical illusion just below the stage. They will sit atop a motorized adjustable rake that can be raised to any angle. A similar mechanism will enable the orchestra pit to rest in one of three positions: below house level (out of sight), at house level (to add more seats), or at stage level as a thrust extending into the audience.

Backstage, the ancient hemp rigging system, which uses ropes, sandbags, and pulleys to shift large set panels and scenery into place, will be augmented with a modern counterweight and cable system that acts much like a Nautilus machine. Other major backstage improvements include a Mason Street loading ramp and (after demolition of the stage-left wall) a much-needed scene dock for building and storing sets. Less extensive but equally important improvements run the gamut from hanging lights in a new, state-of-the-art concealed grid to rewiring the house so that speakers can be installed anywhere in the auditorium. A high-tech communications system will allow the crew, stage management, box office, and front-of-house staff to be in touch at all times.

Artistic Director Carey Perloff is eager to utilize the Geary's new technology. "We wanted a space in which major classical work, musicals, physically demanding shows, and Brechtian-style theater could co-exist comfortably with intimate drama," she says. "With an adjustable rake we can dance and run on the stage more easily, and we can build three-dimensional scenery that doesn't have to balance at an awkward angle."

Ed Raymond, A.C.T.'s Scene Shop Foreman—and author of many of the new ideas—is also eager to get back to the Geary after years of trying to adapt ambitious A.C.T. productions to the limitations of the smaller Stage Door and Marines Memorial theaters. "Usually it's the space that limits the artistic range of a production," he says. "That will not be the case in the Geary. With the new stage and equipment we can articulate any director's vision. No matter how difficult or involved a show looks on paper, we can consider every idea that a design team gives us as a real possibility."

—Tim Fisher

The lighting grid will be replaced with a state-of-the-art concealed system.

Sponsorship of this production of Home has been generously provided by A.C.T. board of trustees chairman Alan L. Stein and his wife, Ruth. Spanning more than two decades, the Steins' involvement with A.C.T. goes back to the company's earliest beginnings, when Cyril Magnin and Alan Becker invited Alan to join them on the former California Association for A.C.T. board. The Steins' involvement also extends far beyond their critical financial support. Since becoming board president in 1989, Alan has sought to diversify membership of the trustees and make the board more broadly representative of the community. His greatest responsibilities, however, arise as chair of A.C.T.'s Geary Theater capital campaign committee, charged with raising the $24 million necessary to restore the eighty-year-old historic theater damaged in the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake. After five years of soliciting donations from all levels of the community, wrangling funds from government agencies, and working closely with architectural firms, Stein's committee and A.C.T. had reason to celebrate last June when construction equipment rolled down Geary Street to begin work on the building.

Past sponsors of the A.C.T. productions of Creditor and Uncle Vanya, the Steins came to San Francisco from New York more than twenty years ago. After Alan received his M.B.A. from the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, he joined Goldman Sachs and Company, where he remained for twenty-two years. In 1982 he became a general partner, director of investment banking, and a member of the executive committee of Montgomery Securities. He has also served as the secretary of the Business and Transportation Agency for the State of California, and was associate dean of executive education at U.C. Berkeley's business school. A man with a multitude of commitments, he still makes room for other philanthropic activities in the community as well, including work as founding chairman of Bridge Housing, an award-winning nonprofit company formed to provide affordable housing.

Despite their busy schedules, the Steins have always managed to find time for going to the theater. "Ruth and I have been looking forward to Home for quite a while," Alan says. "This year has already been an exciting one for A.C.T., with booming subscription sales and commencement of the Geary's reconstruction project. But we're both happy now to concentrate on the season and the plays, because they are the real core of everything that A.C.T. is about."

A.C.T. mourns the passing of longtime trustee and devoted benefactor Albert J. Moorman, who died on September 17, 1994. He was seventy-three.

For more than twenty years, Moorman sustained the artistic life of A.C.T. with his unflagging generosity, as vice president first of the board of trustees of the California Association for A.C.T. and later of the board of the American Conservatory Theatre Foundation. His enthusiastic lobbying on behalf of A.C.T. contributed significantly to the increased success of the company's local fundraising efforts, while his leadership as chairman of the board's nominating committee helped to create and sustain a level of excellence and service in A.C.T.'s principal governing body.

After receiving a B.A. in international relations from the University of Minnesota in 1942, Moorman studied corporate and business law at Harvard, graduating with a J.D. in 1948. He and his wife, Elizabeth "Bette" Mills Davis Moorman, then moved to the Bay Area—where an inspired performance by Tallullah Bankhead sparked a love affair with the Geary Theater that was to last more than half a century. Moorman joined McCutchen, Doyle, Brown & Enersen, the Bay Area's second largest law firm, and became a partner in 1960. In 1976, he was the first attorney elected to the newly established post of managing partner; he held the position until 1985, longer than any other individual in the firm's history, helping to make McCutchen a pioneer in the diversification and democratization of American law firms.

Moorman also served on the boards of the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art and the National Corporate Theatre Fund, as chairman of the development committee of the Menlo School and College, on the Committee of Art of Stanford University, and on the advisory committee of the Allied Arts Guild.

"Al was a true friend to A.C.T., a gentle spirit whose wise counsel was critical to the company's growth and continued success," says A.C.T. Administrative Director, Thomas W. Flynn. "His enduring faith in A.C.T. and high standard of service are precious legacies that we will treasure for generations to come."

Moorman is survived by his wife Bette, daughter Lisa Moorman Fremont, and son Mark Davis Moorman. A.C.T. has also named a rehearsal studio after Moorman as a lasting tribute to his invaluable contribution to A.C.T. and the arts in the Bay Area.

"You are part of the life of our theater, and part of our creative family... When you hear applause at the end of a play, you must remember that applause is for you; for all of us at A.C.T. send it to you with our gratitude and love ever."

—A.C.T. founding Artistic Director Willison Ball to Albert Moorman (1980)
IN MEMORIAM

Sydney Walker

A radiant star of the American stage has been tragically extinguished. On September 30, 1994, beloved A.C.T. company veteran Sydney Walker succumbed to cancer at the age of seventy-three. Walker had been scheduled to appear in A.C.T.'s production of David Storey's Home, but was forced to withdraw from the cast due to illness. The production is dedicated to his memory.

"Sydney was a truly extraordinary soul and a one-of-a-kind human being," says A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff. "He radiated an incredible joy wherever he went: joy with his work, his life, his students, his fellow man. He seemed to dedicate his life to reaching into our hearts through theater, and he was never happier than when inhabiting a role on stage or helping a student in the classroom. Everyone felt this remarkable gift that he had, everywhere he went."

Walker's distinguished career— which spanned more than 240 stage productions and five decades—reflected a superb mastery of his craft and the uncanny ability to portray a vast range of characters. Born May 4, 1921 in Philadelphia, Walker trained with Jasper Deeter at the nearby Hedgerow Theatre and at Paris's Conservatoire Nationale de Musique. He launched his acting career in 1950 in Michigan and San Francisco—appearing with the San Francisco Opera—before heading east to New York. From 1963-69 he was a leading actor with APA Repertory Company under the direction of Ellis Rabb; he also appeared for three seasons with the Lincoln Center Repertory Company under Jules Irving.

While in New York, Walker led a double life, taping popular soap operas during the day—including "The Secret Storm," "As the World Turns," and "The Guiding Light"—and appearing by night on the stage in a variety of roles on and off Broadway. He made his Broadway debut in 1960 opposite Sir Laurence Olivier and Anthony Quinn in Beckett, followed by leading roles with Helen Hayes, Eva le Gallienne, Lotte Lenya, Uta Hagen, and Anthony Quale in War and Peace, Mary Stuart, School for Scandal, The Misanthrope, The Cherry Orchard, You Can't Take It with You, The Wild Duck (for which he received a Tony Award nomination), and the CBS Daytime 90 series "Trio for Lovers." At Lincoln Center Repertory he appeared in An Enemy of the People, Playboy of the Western World, Antigone, The Crucible, Twelfth Night, A Streetcar Named Desire, The Merchant of Venice, and Enemies.

In 1974, William Ball invited Walker to join A.C.T. in San Francisco. "He called me July 23, 1974, while I was playing Molière's The Miser at Olney Summer Theatre," Walker once recalled, "and said, 'I don't know if this is the second or third time I've invited you to come to A.C.T., but I've decided this time not to take No for an answer.' I was very impressed with the statement. I came."

In his twenty years as a leading man with A.C.T., Walker taught the art of acting to scores of aspiring actors and appeared in more than sixty productions, from his 1974 portrayal of Hilmar in Pillars of the Community to his most recent role as Jean Stapleton's over-fo nd husband in the 1993 production of Molière's The Learned Ladies. Walker toured with A.C.T. to the Soviet Union as Malachi Stack in The Matchmaker and captivated generations of A.C.T. theatergoers with his portrayals of James Joyce in Travesties, Martin in Hotel Paradiso, Father Dewis in Buried Child, Bowery Rose in Diamond Lil, Truscott in Lost, the Judge in The Chalk Garden, Chrsysalde in The School for Wires, Henry Ormonroyd in When We Are Married, Piotr in Nothing Sacred, and Scrooge in the Laird Williamson and Dennis Powers adaptation of A Christmas Carol.

In recent seasons he played Prospero for the San Francisco Shakespeare Festival and King Lear for the Oregon Shakespeare Festival (the latter under the direction of A.C.T. Associate Artistic Director Richard Seyd), to great acclaim.

In his final years, Walker enjoyed a renaissance in his film career. In 1992, he portrayed the old man who exchanges bodies with a young woman in the film of Craig Lucas's Prelude to a Kiss (with Alec Baldwin and Meg Ryan), reprising the role he created at Berkeley Repertory Theatre in 1988. He also appeared as Robin Williams's amorous bus driver in the 1993 film Mrs. Doubtfire. Other film credits included the doctor in Love Story (with Ali MacGraw and Ryan O'Neal); Puzzle of a Downfall Child (opposite Faye Dunaway); the voice of Papa Ewok in George Lucas's The Ewok Legend; and narrating John Korty's Oscar-winning documentary Who Are the Debors? His television appearances included the made-for-television movies The Long Road Home, Eye on the Sparrow, and Shadow of a Doubt and the dramatic series "The Defenders."

Walker is survived by his sisters Barbara Shive and Dorothy Walker. At his request, his ashes will be scattered over San Francisco Bay. A.C.T. will host a memorial service in his honor on November 10, 1994, at 2 p.m. at the Stage Door Theatre. All who loved him are invited to attend.
Edith Sherin Markson

Edith Sherin Markson, a founding member and devoted friend of A.C.T., and an activist in American-Eastern European theater exchange, died on Saturday, September 10, while visiting in Santa Fe, New Mexico.

Born Edith Sherin on July 16, 1913 in Hattiesburg, Mississippi, Markson was a lifelong theater enthusiast and an inspirational leader in the regional theater movement in the United States. Working first as a theatrical press agent in New York and for the World's Fair, she founded the Fred Miller Theater, later the Milwaukee Repertory Theater, in 1955. There she invited the young William Ball, Ellis Rabb, and Allen Fletcher to direct, and it was in Milwaukee that their ideas for A.C.T. took shape. A decade later, Markson helped found A.C.T. in Pittsburgh, where the company performed for two years before moving to San Francisco in 1967. As a kind of roving ambassador for the Ford Foundation, Markson, together with her close friend and Ford Foundation vice president McNeil “Mac” Lowry, committed herself to helping the city raise the funds necessary for A.C.T. to make its permanent home in San Francisco. "Mac and Edith were soul mates," says her daughter, Mary Markson Dawe. "On the same path for the enrichment of theater, working together from the beginning, particularly in their vision for regional theater."

During the following two decades, Markson devoted her unflagging support and considerable energy to making William Ball’s dream of establishing a great resident conservatory theater a reality. She served as A.C.T.’s development director and vice president of the board of trustees until 1980 and returned to San Francisco to work with former A.C.T. artistic director Ed Hastings from 1987 to 1990, helping to promote A.C.T. both nationally and internationally. “Edith was the godmother of the American regional theater movement,” confirms Hastings. “She made us offers we couldn’t refuse—and she was never afraid to support who and what she loved.”

After A.C.T.’s 1976 tour to Moscow, Leningrad, and Riga (Latvia)—to which she greatly contributed—Markson created the Theater International Exchange Services Foundation and person-ally engineered many visits between American and Russian, Yugoslavian, and other Eastern European artists and administrators. She also served on the executive board of directors and as vice president of Theatre Communications Group, and on the Theatre Advisory Panel of the National Endowment for the Arts. As an advisor to the Ford Foundation, she had since 1991 expedited a new Ford Foundation program administered by Arts International to bring Russian theater managers for internship training with American theater companies.

“She was my sister-in-law and my friend,” says Markson’s sister-in-law, Jane Alexander, Director of the National Endowment for the Arts. “Edith had countless friends in Russia and elsewhere, and made it possible for those involved in American theater to travel and work behind the Iron Curtain, and for our Soviet counterparts to do the same here. She was equally committed to theater in the United States, contributing her time and expertise to organizations from New York to Wisconsin to California. She will be sorely missed by all in the world of theater.”

Markson is survived by her son, Simpson Markson; her daughter Mary Markson Dawe, and her husband Daniel Dawe; granddaughters Sara and Katelyn Dawe and grandson Christopher Markson; and by her brother, director and producer Ed Sherin, and his wife, Jane Alexander.

A memorial service was held for Markson on October 10, 1994; A.C.T. has named a rehearsal studio at 30 Grant Avenue in her honor. At her children’s request, donations may be made to The Geary Theater Campaign for the American Conservatory Theater, 30 Grant Avenue, San Francisco, California 94108.

He has acted at theaters throughout the West Coast, including roles in A Cup of Coffee at the Pasadena Playhouse, Milton Katselas's Romeo and Juliet at the Skylight Theater, and the Mark Taper Forum productions of Aristocats, Nothing Sacred, Green Card, and Vaclav Havel's A Private View, for which he won a Drama-Logue Award. His face has become familiar to television viewers from episodes of "Coach," "Home Improvement," "Sisters," "Picket Fences," "Silk Stalkings," "L.A. Law," "Wonder Years," and "Night Court," among many others. On film he has been seen in Throw Momma from the Train, Naked Gun, Doc Hollywood, A Class Act, and, most recently, Naked Gun 33 1/3.

Among her many credits with A.C.T. are roles in The House of Bernarda Alba, Hotel Paradiso, Sunday in the Park with George, and Saturday. Sunday and Monday. While on leave from A.C.T., she enjoyed eighteen months portraying Nurse Ratched in the long-running San Francisco production of One Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest. In the spring of 1995 she will direct Clifford Odets' Rocket to the Moon at the Aurora Theatre in Berkeley.

A graduate of Brown University, Paterson served in the army for four years before starting his professional acting career in a summer stock company. He appeared for at least part of every season for twenty years at the Cleveland Play House, taking time out for live television, films, and four national tours with his own one-man shows. The A.C.T. productions in which he has appeared in major roles include You Can't Take it with You, Jumpers, The Matchmaker (U.S.S.R. tour), All the Way Home (Japan tour), Buried Child, The Gin Game, Painting Churches, The Doctor's Dilemma, Saint Joan, and Saturday; Sunday and Monday and Pygmalion, for both of which he received the Bay Area Theatre Critics' Circle Award for best supporting actor, and The Cocktail Hour, for which he received a Bay Area Theatre Critics' Circle Award for best principal performance. A.C.T. Profiles

CAREY PERLOFF (Artistic Director) assumed artistic leadership of A.C.T. in June 1992. Known for directing innovative productions of classics and new works adapted from or inspired by classical works and themes, Perloff opened her first season at A.C.T. with August Strindberg's Cedars, followed by Timberlake Wertenbaker's new translation of Antigone and last season's acclaimed production of Anton Chekhov's Uncle Vanya. In the summer of 1993 she staged the world premiere of Steve Reich and Beryl Korot's new music-theater-video opera The Cave at the Vienna Festival, which was subsequently presented at the Hebbel Theater in Berlin, Royal Festival Hall in London, and Next Wave Festival at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Perloff served as Artistic Director of New York's CSC Repertory, Ltd.-The Classic Stage Company from 1986 to 1992, where she directed the acclaimed world premiere of Ezra Pound's version of Sophocles' Elektra (with Pamela Reed and Nancy Marchand), the American premiere of Harold Pinter's Mountain Language (with Jean Stapleton and Peter Riegert) on a double bill with his The Birthday Party, Tony Harrison's Phaedra Britannica, Thornton Wilder's The Skin of Our Teeth, Lynne Alvarez's translation of Tirso de Molina's Don Juan de Sevilla, Michael Feingold's version of Alexandre Dumas's The Tower of Evil, Beckett's Happy Days (with Charlotte Rae), Brecht's The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui (with John Turturro), and Len Jenkins's Candide. Under her direction, CSC won the 1988 Obie Award for artistic excellence, as well as numerous Obies for acting, design, and production.

Perloff has directed and developed numerous new plays and translations and is completing work with Timberlake Wertenbaker on a new version of Euripides' Hecuba for A.C.T. to be produced in the spring of 1995. In Los Angeles, she staged Pinter's The Collection at the Mark Taper Forum (winning a Drama-Logue Award for outstanding direction), and was Associate Director of Steven Berkoff's Greek (which earned the Los Angeles Drama Critics' Circle Award for best production). Perloff received her B.A. (Phi Beta Kappa) in classics and comparative literature from Stanford University and was a Fulbright Fellow at Oxford University. She is the proud mother of Lexie and Nicholas.

BENNY SATO AMBUSH (Associate Artistic Director) has directed at A.C.T. Miss Evers' Boys and Pecorg (each nominated for eight, and each winning three, Bay Area Theatre Critics' Circle Awards), and Fall Moon. For A.C.T.'s 1990-91 Plays-in-Progress series, he directed Pigeon Egghead, a play about Native Americans which helped inspire the creation of a new Bay Area Native American theater company, Turtle Island Ensemble, currently operating under A.C.T.'s auspices. Other regional directing credits include Playland at the Magic Theatre; the world premiere of Out of Purgatory at the Old Globe Theatre (which won Ambush a nomination for the Los Angeles Robbie Award for best director of a drama); Miss Evers' Boys at the Alabama Shakespeare Festival (filmed excerpts from which appeared in Deadly Deception on the acclaimed PBS series "Nova" in 1993); Fences at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival, Portland; and Sherley Anne Williams' Letters from a New England Negro for the 1991 National Black Theater Festival and the 1992 International Theater Festival of Chicago (the only American entry). He has also directed the annual Bay Area McDonald’s Gospel Fest since 1990.

Before joining A.C.T., Ambush was the Artistic/Producing Director of the Oakland Ensemble Theatre (1982-90), Oakland's first and only resident professional theater, where his directing credits included Division Street, A Night at the Apollo, MLK: We Are the Dream, Tamer of Horses, and Alterations (which won a Drama Logue Award for outstanding direction in 1985). He is a board member of Theatre Communications Group and the Bay Area Playwrights’ Foundation, producers of the annual Bay Area Playwrights’ Festival. He has been active locally, regionally, and nationally in advocacy for cultural equity, non-traditional casting, and pluralism in American art. Ambush received his B.A. from Brown University and his M.F.A. from the University of California, San Diego.
RICHARD SEYD (Associate Artistic Director) was appointed Associate Artistic Director of A.C.T. in 1992. He has received Drama-Logue and Bay Area Theatre Critics Circle Awards for his productions of Cloud 9, About Face, and Noises Off. As Associate Producing Director of the Eureka Theatre Company, he directed The Three Penny Opera, The Island, and The Whiz. He has directed the Pickle Family Circus in London, Three High with Geoff Hoyle, Bill Irwin, and Larry Pisoni at the Marines Memorial Theatre, A View from the Bridge and Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? for Berkeley Repertory Theatre; A You Like It for the San Francisco Shakespeare Festival; and Unfinished Stories for the Mark Taper Forum’s New Play Series. He directed The Learned Ladies (with Jean Stapleton) for CSC Repertory, Ltd. in New York during the 1991-92 season and directed A Midsummer Night’s Dream as the opening production for the California Shakespeare Festival’s new outdoor amphitheater in 1991. That year he also directed Sarah’s Story at the Los Angeles Theatre Center; Born Yesterday at Marin Theatre Company; and King Lear at the Oregon Shakespeare Festival in Portland. For A.C.T. he has directed The Learned Ladies, the American premiere of Dario Fo’s The Pope and the Witch, Bernard Shaw’s Pygmalion, and the Bay Area premiere of David Mamet’s Oleanna. This season at A.C.T. he directs Tom Stoppard’s Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead and Shakespeare’s Othello.

JAMES HAIRE (Producing Director) began his career on Broadway with Eva LeGallienne’s National Repertory Theater. Among the productions he managed were The Madwoman of Chaillot (with LeGallienne, Sylvia Sydney, and Leora Dana), A Touch of the Poet (with Denholm Elliott), The Seagull (with Farley Granger), The Rivals, John Brown’s Body, She Stoops to Conquer, and The Comedy of Errors. He also staged-managed the Broadway productions of Georgy (a musical by Carole Bayer Sager), And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little (with Julie Harris and Estelle Parsons), as well as the national tour of Woody Allen’s Don’t Drink the Water. Off Broadway he produced Ibsen’s Little Eyolf (directed by Marshall W. Mason) and Shaw’s Arms and the Man. Haire joined A.C.T. in 1971 as Production Stage Manager. In 1985 he was appointed Production Director, and in 1993 he assumed his current position. He graduated from Antioch University with a degree in dance and has an M.F.A. in acting from A.C.T.

Flynn has also served as Campaign Director for the Geary Theater Campaign. Prior to joining A.C.T., he held development positions at the Boston Ballet, the Handel and Haydn Society, and Tufts University. Flynn studied East Asian History at Harvard College. He has been a recipient of the Harry Russell Shaw Traveling Fellowship, conducting research on European architecture, and a Management Fellowship from the American Symphony Orchestra League. THE A.C.T. YOUNG CONSERVATORY'S NEW PLAYS PROGRAM:
A PLACE TO DREAM

The theater has always been a place in which to dream. Young performers dream of striding upon the stage, playwrights dream of opportunities to create great work, and teachers dream of ways to combine classroom study with practical experience for their students. The New Plays Program of A.C.T.'s Young Conservatory makes all these dreams come true.

Now in its fifth season, the New Plays Program is a unique project through which A.C.T.'s Young Conservatory commissions new works by outstanding playwrights specifically for performance by students attending the Young Conservatory's Performance Workshop each summer. Previous participants have included playwrights Timothy Mason, Mary Gallagher, Joe Pintauro, Brad Sláight, and Lynne Alvarez, whose work for the program has been published by Smith & Kraus in New Plays from the Young Conservatory and produced on professional stages and in classrooms throughout the country.

Craig Sláight, director of the Young Conservatory, initiated the New Plays Program to address several key issues. As an experienced educator (he recently received the Educational Theater Association's 1994 President's Award), Sláight is all too familiar with the problem of finding material suitable for young acting students. But as a theater professional with a deep commitment to the future of the art form, he feels it is critical to train the next generation of theatergoers as well as the next generation of actors. "The voice of the young is often unheard in dramatic literature," explains Sláight. "That doesn't have to be the case. Young people can learn first-hand that the theater is a place to explore their lives now, not just when they are older. A.C.T. is the kind of place where such exploration is embraced with enthusiasm."

Sláight also believes that the playwright is at the very heart of the theater, and that, in turn, the institution has a responsibility to nurture and challenge the writer. "A.C.T. has a history as a center for producing quality theater and training. I felt the Young Conservatory could therefore be an ideal environment for playwrights to develop challenging new work in a creative atmosphere free from the demand for commercial success.

Thus Slaght launched the New Plays Program in the summer of 1990, commissioning award-winning playwright Timothy Mason to write Ascension Day. "It is wonderful to be asked to write a play," says Mason about the experience. "A commission like this, with only the suggestion that the piece address in some way the perspective of the young, offers a playwright the artistic freedom to explore a point of view not typically available elsewhere. A.C.T. is making a substantial contribution to the literature of the stage with this program."

Mason's inaugural experience in the New Plays Program was so positive that he returned in August 1994 with a new work, The Less Than Human Club, which follows a multiethnic group of high school students in the very volatile year of 1968. "That was a pivotal year for me," Mason explains, "as it was for this country. The world around us was in complete flux, and there was massive upheaval—yet in so many ways our concerns were tiny, hormonal. This play is really about me, about the kids I went to school with."

The Less Than Human Club literally began as a dream. "When the offer came from Craig, I was in a panic. I told him I had absolutely no idea what I'd write about—but I couldn't say no. When I hung up, I was terrified, but somehow I fell asleep that night. The moment I woke up I rolled out of bed and wrote the words 'not hardly human.' Under that I wrote 'Nathan Hale High.'" Then I listed the characters and their descriptions, and wrote the first thirteen pages, all at once. The entire full-length play was written in three weeks—a record for me!"

Much of Mason's work has been produced by the Circle Repertory Company in New York: The Fiery Furnace (with Julie Harris), Babylon Gardens (with Timothy Hutton and Mary-Louise Parker), Only You, and Levitation. Other productions of his work have included Before I Got My Eye Put Out at South Coast Repertory, Bearclaw at Lucille Lortel's White Barn Theater, and In a Northern Landscape at Actors Theatre of Louisville.

With a substantial resume of classic children's literature he has adapted for the prestigious Minneapolis Children's Theater, Mason is also no stranger to dramatic work for young people. His version of Mark Twain's Tom Sawyer has been playing in Russia for six straight years, and this year he briefly interrupted his residency at A.C.T. to attend the premiere of his musical adaptation of Dr. Seuss's How the Grinch Stole Christmas (he is the only theatrical writer ever to receive permission from the Seuss family to adapt the classic).

Mason hastens to point out that the New Plays Program is not "children's theater" in any derogatory sense of the term. "This is a play by any other play I've done for adult audiences, except that the protagonists are younger. There was nothing in the rehearsal process that differed substantively from any professional rehearsal process I have experienced."

An essential element of the New Plays Program is the writer's two-week residency at A.C.T. working directly with students in rehearsal. This year, as is typical of new pieces done in workshop with a playwright, new pages were added to Mason's initial draft every day. "You get so much from working with young people," Mason explains enthusiastically. "There's a world of difference between a twenty-something actor and a real seventeen-year-old saying these lines. They are so honest and raw, and they look to us for so much."

"After the first rehearsal one of the actors was clearly nervous. He finally revealed that he was concerned about my being there, because he was worried that his interpretation wasn't what I had envisioned for the character. I explained to him that there was no way that he could produce exactly what I envisioned—and that that's not what I wanted. Otherwise, I wouldn't be writing for the theater. The theater is about collaboration, about each person involved bringing something new and unexpected to the piece, something I never would have imagined. I told him that it is cross-pollination that creates the most beautiful flowers."

A.C.T.'s Young Conservatory has offered theater training for young people from eight to eighteen since 1972. Professional actors and directors lead students—whose ranks have included alumni Winona Ryder and Nicholas Cage—in a wide spectrum of classes, including varying levels of acting technique, musical theater, vocal production, speech, phonetics, audition, and movement, among many others.

During the 1994-95 season, the Young Conservatory inaugurates its new two-part Young Playwrights Lab for high school students fourteen to eighteen years old: "Discovering the Playwright Within" and "Writing the Play: Heeding Your Inner Voice."
