Dear Friends,

One of the most exhilarating things about working in the Bay Area is that it's a small enough community to allow for a great deal of collaboration, across disciplines, geography, and institutions. Last spring we had the enormous pleasure of engaging in a deep way with the local dance community (and a great San Francisco neighborhood and bar!) in The Tosca Project. With Tarell Alvin McCraney's Brother/Sister Plays, we are honored to be part of a consortium of three Bay Area theaters who have joined together to introduce this formidable young writer to Northern California audiences. The first two parts of the trilogy have already played at Marin Theatre Company and at Magic Theatre, and we are thrilled to be concluding this epic adventure with what is perhaps McCraney's most personal play, Marcus; or The Secret of Sweet.

Although these three plays were originally written as separate plays and only later put together as a trilogy, they share many of the same characters and together create a remarkable sweep of language, magical realism, and self-discovery. Set in the fictional town of San Pere, Louisiana, McCraney's trilogy wrestles with questions of identity, sexuality, spirituality, ambition, and entrapment in a contemporary American context that is simultaneously poetic and very real. Each of the three Bay Area theaters involved in this historic collaboration chose the play that best suited its space and interests and has shared artists wherever possible. Of course here at A.C.T. we are proud that our remarkable M.F.A. Program has provided a great deal of the acting talent for all three productions: recent graduates Lakisha Michelle May, Tobie L. Windham, and Alex Ubokudom had leading roles in In the Red and Brown Water and The Brothers Size, and Marcus adds current M.F.A. Program students Richard Prioleau and Shinelle Azoroh to the mix, as well as recent graduate Omozé Idehenre, who has become a familiar face on our stage after her extraordinary work in The Caucasian Chalk Circle and Scapin. The mission of A.C.T.'s training programs is to create vigorous, passionate artists of the future who will give voice to the stories of their own time, and nowhere is the success of that mission better illustrated than in the Bay Area's presentations of McCraney's trilogy.

This production is helmed by our beloved colleague Mark Rucker (The Rainmaker, The Beard of Avon), who recently became A.C.T.'s associate artistic director. One of Mark's great gifts is his ability to tackle new work and the classics with equal dexterity, making him an ideal director for a new piece with the scope of language and scale of classical reference of Marcus. As we found when we produced Robert O'Hara's Insurrection: Holding History in 1998, the articulate confluence of gay and African American themes in the theater is rare and exciting and brings together audiences that don't often share the same work. As a gay man, Mark was deeply moved by Marcus's search for identity, revolving around the mysteries of his father. As McCraney so beautifully delineates, there are many kinds of love, among them the love of a son for a distant father who has imprinted his being on a sensitive and openhearted child but is no longer there to guide him through the thickets of adolescence and maturity. We hope that Marcus will resonate with audiences of all ages, and we're incredibly grateful to our producing partners at the Magic and MTC for joining with us to tell this richly imagined and unique tale. To those of you who have followed the entire trilogy, we welcome you to Part 3. And to those of you joining the story for the first time, you're in for a beautiful adventure!

Yours,

Carey Perloff

The world premiere of Marcus; or The Secret of Sweet was produced by The Public Theater (Oskar Eustis, Artistic Director; Andrew D. Hamingson, Executive Director) and McCarter Theatre Center (Emily Mann, Artistic Director; Timothy J. Shields, Managing Director). Marcus; or The Secret of Sweet was originally produced at McCarter Theatre Center with support from the NEA New Play Development Program hosted by Arena Stage.
Tarell Alvin McCraney is not a household name—yet. If the meteoric rise of this 30-year-old playwright’s career is any indication, however, it’s only a matter of time. Just three years out of Yale School of Drama, he is only the third playwright to become the International Playwright in Residence at the Royal Shakespeare Company in England. The three plays that make up his Brother/Sister cycle—In the Red and Brown Water, The Brothers Size, and Marcus; or The Secret of Sweet—have received major productions in New York, London, and Chicago (among other places) and have earned numerous prestigious awards, including the inaugural New York Times Outstanding Playwright Award.

Closer to home, San Francisco officials designated September 10, 2010, Tarell Alvin McCraney Day in recognition of his talents and the three-theater joint venture established among Marin Theatre Company (MTC), Magic Theatre, and A.C.T. to produce The Brother/Sister Plays.

Despite the recent flood of accolades, McCraney is adamant that he did not simply appear out of nowhere: “My journey as an artist hasn’t just begun,” he corrected an interviewer in November 2009. “I’ve been doing theater all my life. I’ve been working hard at it and trying new things and continuing to do so. For me the awards are signposts saying, ‘We see you. Keep walking, working, going.’ Sometimes the signposts stop coming, [and] I look closer at the road and figure out which way to go. And that’s okay, because there was a time when there were no signposts and very few paths. I had to make my own.”

McCraney grew up in Liberty City—a tough neighborhood in Miami, Florida’s urban center named after the Liberty Square Housing Project, built in the late 1930s for low-income African Americans. The area remains impoverished, with its residents struggling to make ends meet, but McCraney objects to the notion that the projects are only populated with “baddies”: “They’re people trying to step in the right direction.” It is on behalf of this demographic that he writes, giving, as he says, a theatrical “voice to the voiceless.”

McCraney’s appreciation for theatricality dates back to childhood experiences watching his grandfather preach; his own first performances were in front of his elementary school class, for whom he recited (and critiqued) the Preamble to the U.S. Constitution. McCraney began writing specifically with an audience in mind as a teenager, when he joined Teo Castellanos’s community theater group, which performed in youth rehabilitation and detention centers to spread awareness about HIV. He remembers: “[Simply saying] ‘Don’t do drugs,’ is a bad way of telling someone who has lived a life of crime and drugs not to do drugs. We had to perform from what we knew, from the places we grew up. We told stories that were about our own parents and about the brothers and sisters that we lost, the cousins that we saw get shot or OD.” He continues:

Exploring how we sometimes fall victim to our surroundings, how our parents had sometimes guided us into risky behavior—all of those sharing moments helped us feel not so alone. This is where I began my life as a theater artist. I began to write from myself as a source for people who would understand me instantly. That is where and why I began to write.

McCraney did not go to school for writing, however, but for acting. He attended Miami’s New World School of the Arts High School and then DePaul University in Chicago. While living in the Windy City, he met legendary director Peter Brook, who cast the undergraduate in Can Themba’s South African fable The Suit. McCraney learned many things from Brook—including that a career performing onstage was not for him. Instead, with Brook’s encouragement, McRaney entered Yale’s graduate program in playwriting.

As a writer, McRaney’s inspirations are eclectic. There is no kind of theater that does not excite him, and he is particularly captivated by modern dance, his first true passion, especially the work of Alvin Ailey: “I love dance,” he confesses. “I watch more dance than I do plays. I try to write how I see dance—in moves, in body language that doesn’t lie, in syncopation.” More literary heroes include the poet/editor/activist Essex Hemphill (Earth Life, Brother to Brother: New Writings by Black Gay Men), the Cuban novelist Reinaldo Arenas (Singing from the Well), and playwrights August Wilson, Federico García Lorca, and Caryl Churchill. McRaney’s work is infused with lessons learned not only from the ancient Greeks and Shakespeare, but also from the speeches of Ronald Reagan, the songs of Marvin Gaye, the Yoruba legends of West Africa, and the oral traditions of the American South. As a practiced observer, he retains everything. His poetry, he humbly claims, is simply the result of mashing together everything he has heard, read, or seen: “You’ve got to learn from all kinds of performance how to keep theater valid, to keep it real, to keep it palpable.”

Marcus; or The Secret of Sweet came out of a trip to post-Katrina New Orleans. Considering the despair surrounding its origins, Marcus is not what you might expect, admits the playwright: “It is such an odd little play. It’s not a tragedy, as the other two [Brother/Sister Plays] seem or feel to be. It definitely has a funny bone through it that runs really fast and furious.” He continues, “I wrote it in such a different state of mind. The elfish, trickster part of me was totally in charge.”

McRaney visited the Bay Area in September to see the previews of MTC’s production of In the Red and Brown Water and Magic’s production of The Brothers Size. While he was in town, we were fortunate to be able to speak to him about growing up in Miami’s inner city, writing Marcus, and the importance of self-determination.

WHEN DID YOU GET THE IDEA FOR SETTING MARCUS RIGHT BEFORE KATRINA HAPPENED, AND HOW DID THAT DEVELOP?

It was when I was in New Orleans working on The Breach [at Southern Repertory Theatre with MTC Producing Director Ryan Rilette]. While I was down there I met this guy who was about my age, and he was leading me through New Orleans and talking to me about his experience there. . . . [Marcus became] about this highly buried family history, which had a lot to do with magic and a lot to do with sexuality—things that people just don’t talk about—how a person really has to go through a journey to sift through all of that. Walking through places like Tremé and the Ninth Ward, stories wanted to be told. And when I got the stories, there would be so much humor in them. People in New Orleans have this way of telling you something with such vigor and such life that you’re laughing so hard you forget to cry.

So Marcus became a poem about people who have such a humor that, even if they’re in tears, they got you about to bust a gut. It’s about that exploration, especially for that young man that I met, of growing up and taking on a complicated legacy. Just as this guy was about to get everything he thought he was going to get, the storm came and just shook everything up. I was so in love with that, that I had to create something from it.

COULD YOU DESCRIBE WHAT MARCUS IS ABOUT?

That’s pretty simple: it’s a coming-of-age play. The older I get, the more convinced I am that there are very few actually original stories. There are like 90,000 coming-of-age stories, and this is just one of them. The new thing about Marcus is Marcus. We don’t often hear from the type of person that Marcus represents. Some people’s coming-of-age stories are left out of the canon, especially in the theater. [For example,] I’d like to hear a coming-of-age story from a woman in Juárez. What’s important is that, on an American stage, we allow for the people in the margins, on the fringes, to explore every human condition: to come of age, to marry, to give birth, to die—those many threshold rituals that everybody shares.

I don’t know that there is a message, per se. I think that coming of age is different for everyone. My coming of age was different from yours, and so the day I said to myself, “I’m a man today,” is different from the day that you said whatever you said when you hit up against the identity that society gives you.
That’s essentially what we have to do. Society says, “You are these things. This is how we see you.” And at some point, you have to say to society, “F--- you on these things,” or, “I agree with you on these things.” I have a younger brother, who is about six-foot tall, and he’s attractive and he’s straight. He’s very average and he knows it. He subscribes to the checklist absolutely, because that’s where he feels comfortable. I was never comfortable in that way. I never felt average, so when people tried to put me in an average place, I couldn’t subscribe to it because it didn’t feel right to me. And that’s what is important about Marcus: it is a moment in which someone is saying, “I will say ‘yes’ to these things and ‘no’ to those things.” The revolutions, as well as the accommodations, are important. There’s no message in that, except that in this free society here is a description for what can and cannot happen.

WHEN DID YOU START FEELING LIKE YOU WEREN’T AVERAGE?

There are things learned and there are things felt, and I learned that I wasn’t average first. I was in fifth grade and I was 5’11” and I didn’t want to play basketball [laughter], so automatically I was weird. I was black and I was really tall and I didn’t want to play sports, so clearly there must be a problem.

All young kids demonstrating traits that are different from the mainstream, displaying some queerness, are sexualized really early. People see a young girl who is very tomboyish and say, “Oh, she’s very mannish.” She gets a little older, and they say, “Oh, I think she might be a lesbian.” Saying those things is like saying to a heterosexual girl, “Oh, I think you’re going to like dick when you get older.” They begin the conversation about sexuality before a person has clearly even had these thoughts. Sexuality in our country, I will add, is not based on who you love but on who you have sex with. It’s a very clear distinction. It’s whose penis, or not, you put in where.

When you begin to say things like, “You’re gay. I think you’re a fag,” it makes a child instantly begin to think, “Sex must be something that I want. Even though it’s not on my mind, even though I’m really just interested in learning how to write cursive, something about me must be sexual—and in a way that is different from everyone else.” Those ideas are learned and are introduced at an early age, especially to kids who demonstrate some queer identity. I think the introduction of said ideas that early on is very harmful and unfair to children. induce this.” The call and response; the use of the dramatic pause; the use of positioning, when the actor comes off the stage and stands in the audience and then goes back on the stage. I could see how music played a part. How the dwindling of time played a part. Waiting and waiting and waiting until the final three minutes of church service to say the important messages, and how that spurs the ebb and flow of the afternoon. Those rules apply to everything.

I didn’t wake up one morning and think, “The stage!” There are parts of me that are painfully shy. Acting was actually killing me for a while. The last time I was onstage, I was literally thinking, “I’ve got to get the hell off of here.” Acting and the theater and what we do is so important. Sometimes I think I take it too seriously, my job to reach out, to convey something. But if I am not doing it well, especially in the moment . . . I can be distracted by 90 things—the light hit me in this eye, or that woman just sneezed, and now I’m not focused—and then I go offstage and think, “You didn’t do your job. You were so terrible.”

IS WRITING SAFER FOR YOU THAN ACTING?
No, writing isn’t safer, because I still have to go to that place. I have to find people in my life who will let me go there. It’s hard to have a relationship. I need a large, empty room so I can walk around. I act out all the plays. I read the plays for every director. I’m every character. Tina [Landau, who directed The Brother/Sister Plays in Chicago and New York] jokes all the time, “If one of the actors goes down, you’re in.” And I’ll know how to do it, because for me that’s just part of what it is to write for the stage. It’s different from writing for anything else.

I think other writers work differently. Other writers are much more literary. They’re poets. My friends at school are so smart and their way with language and their grammatical structure is formidable. I’m not like that. I have to understand how this character is moving and what they need: “No he needs a line here that’s going to help him transition there. He can’t get to that emotional place just by saying this. There’s a rev that goes up here. There’s a turn that has to happen that’s not happening here. You need this line, you need this word, you need this thing to get there.” That’s my talent more than anything else: to be able to write how I can act.

WOULD YOU SAY MARCUS IS A GAY PLAY?
It’s definitely a gay play, in the way that it is about identity. You could essentially call Brothers Size a queer play (a play with queer politics), but it’s not about identification. Marcus is, and that’s why it is a gay play. That’s why it’s a black play as well, because it is about figuring out how that identity works.

IT’S INTERESTING THAT YOU’VE SAID YOU DON’T THINK OF MARCUS AS A TRAGEDY, BECAUSE WE KNOW THAT HURRICANE KATRINA IS COMING.
Oskar Eustis said at The Public [Theater]: “Listen, you’ve got a few references in the play that really push it towards Katrina. Could you cut those?” And I told him, “Nobody’s going to think about that. It’s been five years.” Because, for me, I don’t necessarily mean Katrina. But enough people went there, so I decided to cut those moments out [of the trilogy version of Marcus].

I lived through [Hurricane] Andrew. And in my mind, there’s Before Andrew and there’s After Andrew. For anybody who’s lived through a natural disaster, there will always be that marker, because when the sky falls, or when the earth moves, when something that you are sure is going to be there just isn’t, you submit to the idea that you are just this and not in control of all of that. Something shifts in your mind-set. You can make all of the decisions you want to about who you are and where you’re going to go, and then all of a sudden the sky rains down on you. Then what do you do?

After Andrew, my mother came into the room and started sweeping, and I didn’t understand why. But it’s about that courage to say, “I’m going to continue to live, or try to live, in some way, shape, or form.” That step forward, even if it doesn’t make any sense—because certainly sweeping up in the middle of the rubble made no sense to me (and probably to no one around us), but my mother felt like that would help somehow.

For me, that’s why Marcus isn’t a tragedy—because I think that life does go on.
THEATER AS COMMUNITY
My first building block of theatrical understanding came from watching my grandfather preach. It was the way the crowd hollered at my granddaddy when he would pause. When he would tell them they didn’t want to hear the rest, they would shout, “Preach on!” The drums and the organs of the church began to catch his rhythm, my grandfather acting out portions of the piece and the church re-seeing what he described and singing and moaning and crying until they all were on the same accord.

This is theater as community. It is holy theater not because it exalts something on high, but because for the hour or so onstage the audience and actor are one, and all those people, though each seeing it slightly differently, are believing—following the same course or going on a journey together. In The Brother/Sister Plays, I have tried, through language, content and format, to invigorate the communal portion of the plays. The actors speak stage directions that invite the audience to remember that they are in a theater and that the story that is being told is for them and to feel free to call and respond back. Truly, in a world where stories are told, placing them down in a mythological Housing Project taking old stories from the canon of the Yoruba and splicing urban ones. I found that the stories are all still there. So I began to investigate how to use ancient myths, stories, to tell archetypes of these deities were worn on my friends like sleeves. But so is death. Radiantly beautiful is bad, but so too is ugly. The good versus evil, but good and evil at the same time. Life is good, old ways with the European new. Their stories are complex, not formal and holy is happening, that you the audience are most important and we cannot go on this journey of belief without you approval, help, and willingness to go. As the man from Madagascar reminds Oshoosi [in The Brothers Size], “C’mon, let’s go!”

THEATER AS RITUAL
When the slaves of the New World were forced into Christianity, many—especially in places such as Haiti, Brazil, Cuba, and New Orleans—mixed in their home religion and kept practice of their old ways with the European new. Their stories are complex, not good versus evil, but good and evil at the same time. Life is good, but so is death. Radiantly beautiful is bad, but so too is ugly. The archetypes of these deities were worn on my friends like sleeves. I began to investigate how to use ancient myths, stories, to tell urban ones. I found that the stories are all still there. So I began taking old stories from the canon of the Yoruba and splicing them, placing them down in a mythological Housing Project in the South. This made the stories feel both old and new, as if they stood on an ancient history but were exploring the here and now. I mixed in lore and theatrical devices from the Greeks, from Spanish Lorca, from Jacobean England.

This ritual is not new. In order to make the pyramids that still stand today, slaves were made to mix the mortar of old shards of pots, clay bowls in with the new hay, water, and sand because that mixture of old and new created something stronger. Something else. The ritual onstage is taking these very old stories, archetypes, myths, and even rumors, and playing them out with new voices, new bodies, set in new and present times. Hoping to create evenings that make something powerful, something distant yet present, something . . . else.

PLACE: SAN PERE, LA
TIME: LATE AUGUST (DISTANT PRESENT)

“If you tell a story you’re already telling it in the past tense. It’s already happened, so it’s in the distance. But you’re telling it right now, so it’s, therefore, the present. You’ll never be in San Pere because, one, it doesn’t exist and, two, you’ll actually be onstage. Even if San Pere did exist, it wouldn’t exist anymore because the storm came up and pretty much made sure nothing is there anymore.”

—Tarell Alvin McCraney

San Pere, the community in which The Brother/Sister Plays take place, is an invention of Tarell Alvin McCraney’s imagination, but if it were a real place it would, according to him, lie near the town of Buras, Louisiana. The cultural world of the play, though, is a mash-up of the Liberty Square Housing Projects in Miami, where he grew up, the infamous Magnolia Projects in New Orleans, and the more rural environment that surrounds Buras. When asked about San Pere, McCraney says, “It’s like when they ask Alice Walker where the tribe she wrote for The Color Purple was: ‘There is none. I made it up.’”

McCraney has nevertheless placed his imaginary town in a very specific landscape with a very particular history. That place is Plaquemines Parish, an area south of New Orleans at the very end of the Mississippi River delta, where a thin strip of land juts out into the Gulf of Mexico like a big toe testing the water. The Plaquemines Parish government states on its website: “During the summer months, expect the daily rumble of thunder in the afternoons. Hurricane season is from June 1 to November 30, and Plaquemines Parish does occasionally have threats from tropical systems, including hurricanes.”

Hurricane Katrina made its landfall at Buras in Plaquemines Parish on August 29, 2005. Though in the play Marcus’s dreams augur a storm of Katrina’s proportions, McCraney has made it clear in interviews that the play’s impending deluge is not meant to evoke Katrina exclusively. There are five major pre-Katrina hurricanes on record for Buras—1893, 1901, 1915, 1965, and 1969—the last of which leveled all but six structures in the town of 6,000. McCraney’s personal experience is with Hurricane Andrew. A category five hurricane with 165 mph winds, a death toll of 61 people, and damage estimated at near $27 billion, Andrew became the most costly natural disaster in U.S. history (to that point) when it roared across south Florida in August 1992. Hurricane Katrina was a strong category three at landfall, with winds clocking in at 127 mph. It displaced more than 250,000 people (more than the Dust Bowl of the 1930s); the death toll was more than 1,800 people; and estimated costs have to date reached $125 billion, transferring to Katrina the distinction of most expensive natural disaster in U.S. history.
AFRICAN ECHOES

The Brother/Sister Plays draw from the cosmology of the Yoruba people of West Africa. Yoruba culture first spread across the Atlantic when West Africans were sold in the slave trade. Today its influence is felt throughout the African Diaspora, which includes countries ranging from Brazil (candomblé) to Haiti (vodun) to Cuba (santería) to the United States. Practiced in various forms by millions today, Yoruba religious traditions embrace a rich pantheon of orisha, or deities, whose life forces animate and inspire their followers. Like Greek and Roman gods, each orisha corresponds to a particular element of life, such as war, marriage, or justice. Many of the characters in The Brother/Sister Plays share qualities with their Yoruba namesakes.

Tarell Alvin McCraney explains: “It’s about seeing those archetypes in your neighborhood. I could have easily named people Venus and Ares and Hephaestus. It’s about taking classic archetypes and seeing them in a contemporary setting and watching as those roles play out today. . . .

“I didn’t learn about the Yoruba from any African directly; I learned about them from Puerto Ricans and Cubans [in Miami]. . . . I found it interesting that these stories of an oral tradition had lasted so long. So, for me, it is more about the retention of that oral tradition. These stories are not a direct reflection of the West African cosmology; they are what has been passed down and retained in the Americas for so long. They are essentially American stories, because they, like any Germanic story you would hear, like any Norse story you would hear in Minnesota, have been in the bedrock of the American culture from day one and have been passed around in an oral way.”

The love triangle among Oya, Shango, and Ogun is central to In the Red and Brown Water. The barren Oya leaves Ogun for Shango, who is unfaithful. Oya’s sadness drives her to self-mutilation.

The relationship between the responsible Ogun and his misfit brother, Oshoosi, along with their connection to Elegba (a prominent character as Oya’s godbrother in In the Red and Brown Water) is central to The Brothers Size.

We first meet Marcus in In the Red and Brown Water when Elegba brings him as an infant to Oya’s house and proudly shows Oya the birthmark (on his thigh) he shares with his son, which is how Marcus got his name.

Throughout the month of October, while Marcus; or The Secret of Sweet rehearsed on the sixth floor of A.C.T.’s studios at 30 Grant Avenue, two floors up the creative team of A.C.T.’s upcoming season finale, the world premiere of a new musical version of Armistead Maupin’s Tales of the City, busily worked with a remarkable cast to develop the book, music, lyrics, and choreography for what promises to be the event of the Bay Area theater season. The production features a libretto by Tony Award–winning writer Jeff Whitty (Avenue Q) and music and lyrics by Jake Shears and John Garden of the glam-rock band Scissor Sisters; it is directed by Tony Award winner Jason Moore (Avenue Q and Shrek: The Musical) and is choreographed by Larry Keigwin.

Unlike rehearsals, theater workshops are not intended to culminate in a fully staged production; instead the goal is to help the creators develop a piece of writing, such as a script or score, that is still in draft form. The plan for A.C.T.’s Tales workshop was to get the libretto and music ready for next spring, so that the cast and creative team can begin rehearsals for the world premiere production—which begins performances at A.C.T. in May—with a nearly finished text and score.

“A new musical is one of the hardest things in the world to create,” says director Jason Moore. “Having the time to be together and to try stuff out with actors who interpret the writing is such an important process for any musical, but particularly for one that has this scope.” A.C.T. is committed to developing original large-scale, multidisciplinary productions, especially projects that are immediately relevant to San Francisco—like 2007’s After the War and last season’s dance-based The Tosca Project. “A big part of what we do here,” says A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff, “is celebrate our community. We believe that gorgeous things locally become gorgeous things globally. It is an incredible honor for us to work on this material—which was born in San Francisco—and launch it with this potent combination of artists.”

Armistead Maupin, author of the original Tales of the City newspaper series in the San Francisco Chronicle and the beloved novels it inspired, was himself in attendance for the first day of the three-week developmental workshop. “Thirty-seven years ago,” he told the assembled Tales team and A.C.T. staff, “I was working as a mail boy at Hoefer, Dieterich & Brown down on the Barbary Coast, the ad agency that became the model for Halcyon Communications in Tales. I was desperate to get out of there, and I had heard through the grapevine that there was a job opening in the promotions office of A.C.T. I was just over the moon because I thought, ‘Oh you would get to work in an office, but it’s theater. It would be perfect for me!’ I didn’t get the job, so I had to go out and write a book to find a way to bring myself back to A.C.T.”

“It is thrilling to be at this institution,” continued Maupin. “It is the perfect place for Tales of the City, because it did grow from this little, local thing that was laughed at and protested. To think that it has lasted all this time. I’m hearing from people who are coming from Paris to see the show. It’s very exciting.”

YEARNING FOR MOSCOW

The A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts (M.F.A.) Program classes of 2011 and 2012 came together this month to present Anton Chekhov’s masterpiece The Three Sisters, translated by Carol Rocamora and directed by Shakespeare Santa Cruz Artistic Director Marco Barricelli, a longtime member of the A.C.T. artistic family. A core acting company member at A.C.T. for more than a decade, Barricelli most recently appeared on the A.C.T. stage in Vigil, alongside Olympia Dukakis.

Chekhov’s enduring exploration of the lost hopes and loves of the Prozorov sisters, who dream of escaping their barren existence in a provincial Russian town to return to the thrill of life in urban Moscow, is one of the playwright’s most popular and accessible works. A fixture in the international canon, the play presents a formidable challenge even to seasoned actors—including Barricelli, who made a memorable Vershinin in the 2002 production of The Three Sisters on the A.C.T. mainstage—and represents a kind of artistic Everest for young actors just starting their artistic careers. Barricelli says: “This is one of the greatest plays in dramatic literature and provides actors with a profound opportunity to work on characters that will demand the deepest kind of revelation of their own souls as people and artists. It is my hope that every student involved in this piece closed this production a slightly better actor than they were at the first read-through. It’s all about the journey.”

A.C.T. Conservatory Director Melissa Smith agrees: “This is a tremendous play of character. I know that in Marco’s capable hands, this production gave a great opportunity to both our second- and third-year students to delve into these rich characters to create full and complete arcs.”

A.C.T. M.F.A. AND YC GO ON A WILD RIDE

A.C.T.’s Master of Fine Arts Program and Young Conservatory (YC) have teamed up to present the world premiere of Wild Kate, a new work by award-winning American playwright Karen Hartman (Girl Under Grain, Goldie, Max & Milk). Four members of the M.F.A. Program class of 2011 appear alongside YC actors to tell the story of a semester-at-sea program that goes terribly awry when a vengeful captain, named Wild Kate, tries to set right the damage done by the BP oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico.

Hartman’s story of an obsessed captain is largely inspired by Herman Melville’s Moby Dick, says the playwright, who first came across the novel in high school, though she admits she didn’t finish it then. “At the time, I thought it was just really boring,” she confesses. “It has all of these digressions, like ‘How Whales Were Diagrammed from the 5th to the 18th Century.’” When she finally read Moby Dick in its entirety, however, Hartman fell in love with the story’s slow meanderings, finding them “particularly moving, especially given where it all ends up.”

Moby Dick was the perfect springboard for Hartman to create a meaty piece for young actors. “I thought of a kid saying, ‘Call me Isabel,‘” says Hartman, playing on Moby Dick’s famous opening line, “Call me Ishmael.” “I was interested in a coming-of-age story about a young woman encountering an obsessed, vengeful adult. People in their teens are really quick to see hypocrisy: compromise looks very hypocritical to them, and holding fast to a mission can look very admirable. There’s something about being a grownup that involves certain contradictions: We drive a car to a protest for environmental justice, for instance. There’s something immature but also truthful about being the person who says, ‘This is bullshit. You say this, but you do this.’”

Wild Kate, directed by W. D. Keith, is the fourth new work jointly commissioned by the M.F.A. Program and the YC in a collaboration that allows students access to the process of play development on a level rarely seen in young actor training. “The average teen sees plays in published books, and has no real sense of the writer’s role in the theater,” says YC Director Craig Slaight. “I’ve never seen teens more excited than they are when working with an author to develop a new play—eyes wide open, with such unconditional reverence for the playwright. In our experience training young actors at A.C.T., it is more than obvious that working on new plays is at the heart of the seminal urge to create.”

Wild Kate runs through November 6 at Zeum Theater (221 Fourth Street, San Francisco). Tickets are $20 and available at www.act-sf.org or by calling the A.C.T. Box Office at 415.749.2228.

A.C.T. AND CJM PRESENT HIGHER

On November 4 and 7, A.C.T. presents a staged reading of Higher, a play by A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff, in the Contemporary Jewish Museum’s iconic Yud Gallery. The play—directed by A.C.T. Associate Artistic Director (and director of Marcus; or The Secret of Sweet) Mark Rucker—examines what happens when two architects with very different visions (who also happen to be lovers) are drawn into a competition to build a major memorial in Israel. “This is an exciting part of our ongoing programming with the Contemporary Jewish Museum, in which we bring together audiences for projects that highlight what both institutions do best,” explains A.C.T. Dramaturg and Director of Humanities Michael Paller. “It makes perfect sense to hear Higher, a provocative play about architecture, competition, and love, in the Yud, itself a provocative space in a building designed by Daniel Liebeskind, one of the world’s best-known—and most provocative—architects.” Tickets can be purchased on the CJM website, thecjm.org. MEET TYEE TILGHMAN, A.C.T. M.F.A PROGRAM CLASS OF 2013

In each program of the A.C.T. mainstage season, we are pleased to introduce to you one of A.C.T.’s remarkable first-year M.F.A. Program students. In this issue, meet Tyee Tilghman.

NICKNAME Tizzle, or Tizz for short.

BIRTHPLACE Kaua‘i, Hawaii.

HOMETOWN I’m a military brat, so I don’t really have one.

FIRST THEATER EXPERIENCE Telling a nonverbal story about an engagement ring in Drama 1 at Eleanor Roosevelt High School.

FAVORITE THEATER EXPERIENCE Performing an excerpt from Ameriville with Universes at the D.C. Hip-Hop Theater Festival.

IF I COULD PLAY ANY ROLE, I WOULD WANT TO PLAY Aaron in Titus Andronicus or Gamal in Ameriville.

MY STORY I was blessed with the opportunity to work at Arena Stage in Washington, D.C., and after understudying the role of Eugene in Yellowman there I was given the chance to play the role at Curious Theatre Company in Denver. The company environment that I was a part of in Denver brought me to a new level as an artist, and I decided to audition for grad school in search of a similar company-driven experience. And so . . . here I am at A.C.T.

RANDOM FACT I sometimes purposely choose the opposing side in arguments to see how well people defend their position.

EDUCATION I got my B.F.A. in drama from West Virginia University. GO MOUNTAINEERS!!! And I learned that I like my theater with a cup of social relevance while working in the Living History program at the Denver Center Theatre Academy with Daniel Renner . . . who is an A.C.T. grad, might I add.

SPECIAL SKILLS I bake a mean cheesecake, and I rock the house doing “Under the Sea” from The Little Mermaid at karaoke.

HOBBIES Basketball, volleyball, reading sci-fi and fantasy novels, and karaoke.

Under Richard’s leadership, Second Stage provided the initial home for the Broadway productions Everyday Rapture, Next to Normal, and The Little Dog Laughed. From 1983 to 2005, Richard enjoyed a rich and varied career with Roundabout Theatre Company. By the time she departed as managing director, Roundabout had been transformed from a small nonprofit on the verge of bankruptcy into one of the country’s largest and most successful theater companies of its kind. Richard is the recipient of six Tony Awards as producer, for Roundabout productions of Cabaret (1998), A View from the Bridge (1998), Side Man (1999), Nine (2003), Assassins (2004), and Glengarry Glen Ross (2005). Producer of more than 125 shows at Roundabout, she had direct supervision of all general and production management, marketing, and financial aspects of the theater’s operations. She conceptualized and oversaw the redesign of the three permanent Roundabout stages—Studio 54, the American Airlines Theatre, and the Harold and Miriam Steinberg Center for Theatre. She directed the location search for Cabaret and supervised the creation of that production’s environmental Kit Kat Klub.

Prior to her tenure at Roundabout, Richard served as business manager of Westport Country Playhouse, theater manager for Stamford Center for the Arts, and business manager for Atlas Scenic Studio. She began her career working as a stagehand, sound designer, and scenic artist assistant.

Program. Before joining A.C.T. in 1995, Smith served as director of the program in theater and dance at Princeton University, where she taught acting for six years. She has worked with people of all ages in venues around the country, including teaching in Hawaii and in Florence, Italy. Also a professional actor, she has performed in numerous off-off Broadway plays and at regional theaters, including A.C.T. In 2004 she toured London and Birmingham (U.K.) in Berkeley Repertory Theatre’s production of Continental Divide. Smith holds a B.A. in English and theater from Yale College and an M.F.A. in acting from the Yale School of Drama.

He also stage-managed the Broadway productions of And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little and Georgy (a musical by Carole Bayer Sager), as well as the national tour of Woody Allen’s Don’t Drink the Water. Off Broadway he produced Ibsen’s Little Eyolf (directed by Marshall W. Mason) and Shaw’s Arms and the Man. Haire joined A.C.T. in 1971. He and his department were awarded Theater Crafts International’s award for excellence in the theater in 1989, and in 1992 Haire was awarded a lifetime achievement award by the Bay Area Theatre Critics Circle.

Music is the universal language

Sometimes the most meaningful communication happens without dialogue. Great art tells us that we are not alone with our emotions.

To the artists and performers of the Bay Area, thank you for inspiring us with the shared experience of music.
WHAT IT MEANS TO BE A COMMISSIONING SPONSOR

Ambassador James C. Hormel and Michael P. Nguyen join friends Nancy Livingston and Fred Levin as commissioning sponsors of this spring’s world premiere production of Armistead Maupin’s Tales of the City. Like so many San Francisco residents, Hormel and Nguyen connect very personally to this powerful story of finding in San Francisco a wonderful, open-hearted place to call home. They also recently produced A.C.T.’s world premiere production of The Tosca Project.

Armistead Maupin’s Tales delightfully reveal various aspects of the unique character of San Francisco, portrayed in a period that is now a celebrated part of our history. Our city is lovingly shown as a port of welcome for the many diverse venturers who settle here, wishing to maintain their individuality. The message is as poignant today as it was three decades ago. We are eager to see the story come to life on the stage of the American Conservatory Theater, recreating for new audiences the heartwarming modern saga that has meant so much to millions of readers around the world.

—James C. Hormel and Michael P. Nguyen

Appointed U.S. Ambassador to Luxembourg by President Bill Clinton, Jim Hormel was the first openly gay man to represent the United States as an ambassador. A graduate of Swarthmore College and the University of Chicago Law School, Hormel later served as dean of students and director of admissions at the law school. He was a member of the 1995 U.N. Commission on Human Rights and the 1996 U.S. delegation to the U.N. General Assembly. In 1981 he was one of the founders of the Human Rights Campaign (HRC). He funded the creation of the James C. Hormel Gay & Lesbian Center at the San Francisco Public Library in 1995. He is a member of the board of managers of Swarthmore College, the board of governors of the San Francisco Symphony, the board of trustees of the San Francisco Foundation, the board of directors of People for the American Way, the board of governors of the Commonwealth Club of California, and the board of trustees of Grace Cathedral.

Michael Nguyen also graduated from Swarthmore College, with degrees in sociology/anthropology and dance. Committed to public service and civic and social justice, he works closely with Hormel on numerous educational, artistic, and political nonprofit initiatives and efforts. In February 2010, Mayor Gavin Newsom appointed Nguyen to the San Francisco Public Library Commission. An aspiring performing artist, Nguyen is currently further developing his skills in dance, piano, and voice. He has been a veteran ensemble member of the Albany Park Theater Project in Chicago, studied chamber music at the European American Musical Alliance in Paris, choreographed numerous dance pieces, and advanced his training in contemporary ballet and modern dance at the San Francisco Conservatory of Dance, New York University’s Tisch Dance Festival, the Bates Dance Festival, and several other acclaimed dance programs around the country.

EVERY DOLLAR YOU GIVE MAKES GREAT THEATER HAPPEN!

Did you know that A.C.T. is a nonprofit organization, and that the price of your ticket covers just 60% of our expenses? Your gift to the Annual Fund helps make up the rest. No matter what the amount, you can play an important role at A.C.T.

As a donor, you’ll receive exciting benefits designed to bring you closer to the work you see onstage. Get an inside look at the making of live theater with a visit to our prop and scene shop or costume shop, a backstage tour, or a technical rehearsal.

To learn more, visit act-sf.org/donate or call 415.439.2462.
Endow Your Annual Support and Join the Prospero Society

Thank you, subscribers and Annual Fund donors! Your longstanding support, year after year, makes an immeasurable difference to A.C.T. and the work we do. Being able to count on your generosity allows us to take artistic risks, produce the best possible work on our stage, and train the next generation of theater artists. What will happen to this wonderful legacy of support in future generations when you are no longer here to give?

Endowing your annual gift or your annual subscription purchase through your will or other estate plan is a wonderful way to continue your current support after your lifetime and will make you an honored member of A.C.T.’s Prospero Society.

Benefits of membership include:

- Invitations to special events with guest artists
- Use of the VIP Lounge in the theater
- Recognition in A.C.T. publications

Prospero Society gifts may include:

- Bequests of cash or property through a will or living trust
- Retirement plans and life insurance that name A.C.T. as beneficiary
- Charitable annuity and remainder trusts

A.C.T. gratefully acknowledges the Prospero Society members listed below, who have made an investment in the future of A.C.T. by providing for the theater in their estate plans. For information about membership, please contact Paul Knudsen at 415.439.2353 or pknudsen@act-sf.org.

With your support, imagine how many more lives we could change.

Walter Hollis didn’t just choose UCSF to treat his prostate cancer. When a second cancer and heart condition developed, he chose UCSF again. Our groundbreaking cancer care is just one reason UCSF has an international reputation for quickly translating scientific innovations into lifesaving treatments. Now, we’re building a new hospital complex—including children’s, women’s specialty and cancer hospitals—where our world-class doctors can practice medicine in the most technologically advanced facilities available anywhere. With your help, just imagine the possibilities.

Help us build the new UCSF hospitals at Mission Bay.
