Q: Is being born into wealth a burden?
A: It doesn’t have to be. But it does come with its own set of complexities. Parents grapple with issues beyond the technical. What is the effect of inheritance? How do you instill a sense of responsibility in children who may never have to work? Even allowances can become an issue.

Q: What is Family Advisory Practice?
A: We’re a division of The Citigroup Private Bank devoted to helping clients think through the human implications of their wealth.

Q: Can you elaborate?
A: It’s not just about increasing or preserving assets. Parents want their wealth to bring about the best possible experience for their children. Family philanthropy is the next-most-common issue for us.

Q: This doesn’t sound like a banker talking.
A: I’ll take that as a compliment.

Q: One would have expected to hear about financial products for affluent families.
A: Obviously, we make our living providing comprehensive financial solutions for people. But we can do that much better when we have a clear understanding of our clients and their values. So it isn’t all that far afield when you think about it.

Secrets Shared

by Jessica Werner

Fugard, who has called writing “essentially a trade in secrets,” relishes the process of concealment and revelation at the emotional heart of his plays. Nowhere is this trade more acutely felt and universally resonant than in “Master Harold”, which has deeply affected audiences since its world premiere almost 20 years ago. Fugard spoke with us in March about the play’s enduring appeal to postapartheid audiences and the special place it will forever hold in the playwright’s heart.

Jessica Werner: The notion of hope is central to “Master Harold”...and the boys—the question of whether it’s possible to have hope in one’s own personal growth, as well as hope in society moving beyond oppression. Hally says that he “oscillates between hope and despair.” Is he speaking for you at 17? For you now?

Athol Fugard: I think he is speaking for all people at all ages, actually, because I don’t think any life is without its “valleys of the shadow of death.” I think that as human beings we live with dark moments and the sense of our own mortality. Let’s face it, when we look around us, in whatever society we happen to be living in, we have to inevitably ask ourselves, Have we learned anything at all from history? I mean, when you see ethnic cleansing in the Balkans only a few decades after Hitler and the Holocaust, and after South Africa and apartheid, you have to ask yourself. Do we really learn? And then, just on a personal level, I think we all strive to be better human beings than we are at any given moment. It is a very silly person, man or woman, who at any point in time thinks, Well, I’m just fine the way I am. We are always trying to be better, and that is a very heroic struggle we take on within ourselves, and we stumble and fall a lot in the process and lose hope, and then find hope again.

So, I think men and women are permanently on a tightrope stretched between hope and despair. That certainly is one of the issues of the play. But the play also—and this is something I would like to believe that audiences have got from it—does come down on the side of hope. I mean, I was that little boy who spat in the black man’s face. And I learned a very, very big lesson, and part of learning that lesson came not from Sam giving me the hiding of my life, which I deserved, but from forgiving me. In reality Sam and I recovered from that afternoon. I accepted his outstretched hand of friendship and love, and I think that that afternoon had a profound effect on me and what went on to happen in my life.

Can’t remember now what precipitated it, but one day there was a rare quarrel between Sam and myself. In a truculent silence we closed the café, Sam set off home to New Brighton on foot and I followed a few minutes later on my bike. I saw him walking ahead of me and, coming out of a spasm of acute loneliness, as I rode behind him I called his name, he turned in mid stride to look back and, as I cycled past, I spat in his face. Don’t suppose I will ever deal with the shame that overwhelmed me the second after I had done that.

“THERE is a very HEROIC STRUGGLE.”
—ATHOL
FUGARD

“I THINK WE ALL STRIVE TO BE BETTER
HUMAN BEINGS
THAN WE ARE AT ANY GIVEN MOMENT...THAT IS A VERY
STRUGGLE.”

Athol Fugard in 1982
It's very clear in the play that we hurt ourselves most of all when we are intolerant.

Yes, we are the first victims of any prejudice in our nature. The very first victim, and the most vulnerable victim, and the one who is hurt the most.

What do you think contributed the most to your becoming a person so deeply committed to change, and to developing an awareness of our shared humanity? At the end of the play, it is not necessarily clear that Hally will end up as aware as you are.

As to the influences that came into my life, well, obviously Sam and Willie were hugely important. I mean, I had a father whom I loved, but by virtue of being a weak man, both an alcoholic and crippled, he could never be the father a boy needed. And Sam and Willie were that for me, but it was a double bind for me because how could a black man be a white boy's father? This was South Africa during the years of apartheid. It was a very complex situation.

Do you feel that writing is catharsis? When you completed this play, had you succeeded in working through some of the pain and shame of that episode in your life?

I think I was only ready to write the play because I had already done that work on myself, in terms of self-growth and in terms of understanding the prejudices of that terrible society in which I grew up—understanding how it was brutalizing, mutilating, and in some cases even murdering human beings just because of their skin color.

Do you think audiences react differently to "Master Harold" now that we're seeing it in a post-apartheid world?

No, I don't. I would like to believe that this play is not locked into a moment in history. I think it is locked into a potential that exists in every human heart. You could point to other plays of mine that are definitely historically specific—like A Lesson from Aloes or Sizwe Bansi Is Dead—but this is one of the plays I've authored which I think is not historically specific. I think that is maybe one of the reasons why this play, together with a couple of others, has been so successful and is so repeatedly done, for example here in America.

An aspect of the play that has made a huge impression on me is the metaphor of the ballroom dance, which is a breathtaking way of expressing a vision of a more perfect world.

You see, that was just one of those gifts from life, from Sam and Willie. I think for them it worked the way it works on people watching the play. For Sam and Willie, I think they loved [dancing] so much because that ballroom was in fact for them, as the play says, a wonderful image of how the world could be.

An image of us managing to avoid bumping into one another, stepping on each other's toes.

Absolutely.
Now that apartheid has been officially dismantled, and yet South Africans, to use your metaphor, are still bumping into each other, do you think a more graceful dance is possible?

Oh, you know I am a natural optimist. I can never totally despair. I have never ever in my life handed myself over totally to despair.

Perhaps you have to be an optimist to keep writing.

Exactly. The point also is made by that wonderful sculptor Henry Moore. Somewhere in his notebooks he makes the observation, and it is so true, that no matter what an artist might say consciously, there can be no arguing with the fact that underlying all creative endeavor is a foundation of hope. You make something because you want to give something. Even Beckett, in his gloomiest and most despairing images, is sharing those images with us because there is a kind of central hope in human nature.

Has it been a struggle for you to adjust to no longer writing in a dissident's voice?

It was very disconcerting initially, because those terrible years of apartheid, with the stark, dramatic polarities of right and wrong, were very energizing. And with the release of Nelson Mandela and then the elections, and the [creation of the] wonderful constitution that we've got now and the emergence of a society which is truly democratic, my power sources have changed very radically. For the first couple of years after the change, I was, like most artists in South Africa, stumbling around a little bit. But I have somehow—I wouldn't say reinvented myself, but I've now discovered that I have to find the resources and energy sources from within myself that were formerly external. And I am doing that.

In interviews during those first couple of years of transition you said you feared becoming South Africa's "first literary redundancy."

That's right. But I don't feel that now. And my new play, Sorrows and Rejoicings [which premiers at Princeton's McCarter Theatre in May] takes, I believe, a very sobering look at the reality of the new South Africa as it is at this moment and the challenges that face it. That title says it all. My life as a South African has been a weird and wonderful mixture of those two things, sorrows and rejoicings.

It's a wonderful strength of your plays that you manage to be very political without being polemical.

I don't know how to argue polemically (laugh). I just don't know how to do that. In any case, I think a soapbox would be better.

When you traveled back and forth between the United States and South Africa during apartheid, the differences must have been wrenching—to be able to have openly biracial friendships and performances here, and then to return to such a divided society. What differences strike you the most when you make that journey now?

That is a very good question. In the old days the answer was so very easy. It is not so easy now. I suppose I can put my finger on one thing. When I used to return to South Africa in the days of apartheid and land in that country and be immediately confronted by the reality of apartheid, it was with a degree of shame that I returned to that society. [I was] ashamed that my own people, the Africaners and the whites, had subscribed to that system. America makes one conscious of just what a democracy is meant to be, even though America is, and knows it is, very far from being an ideal democracy. When I return to South Africa now, it is with a degree of pride. I mean, my country pulled off one of the political miracles of the 20th century, maybe the political miracle. Everybody had predicted an eventual bloodbath, in a sense an almost justifiable brutal retaliation. And it didn't happen. Nelson Mandela got out of jail and he sat down with his jailers and we, in a sense, talked our way into a new civilization. It was finally dialogue and not bombs that brought about the change. Yes, that's it—pride. I used to arrive in America and if I happened to fall into a queue that had an African-American immigration officer waiting to check passports, I used to break out into a sweat because my passport identified me as a South African and [I was afraid he or she] would judge me maybe as one of them. Whereas now I give my passport very proudly.

Was it a conscious decision on your part to address political issues indirectly through personal relationships?

I think it came naturally to me because I never thought in political terms. I am a storyteller, and the only stories I could tell as a writer were obviously the stories that were around me and around South Africa, but it is impossible to tell a South African story without bumping into politics. There is no such thing as a simple (laugh) apolitical South African story; the politics of that society then and now permeate every level of your life. You know, they get into bed with you when you lie down with your wife at night. It is as simple as that. And so the politics were an inevitable consequence of my wanting to be an honest storyteller in South Africa.

Do you see the purpose of theater differently now?

Oh no, it is still the cornerstone of civilized morality in any society. Any society should nurture and nourish its theater for all it's worth. It just goes to work on the moral matrix of a society in a way that the mass media can never do. The need to both tell and hear stories is one of the most primitive and almost definitive impulses in the human psyche. And for very complex reasons.

1910 Four British colonies in southern Africa are unified as the Union of South Africa. The constitution specifically denies all designated non-Europeans the right to vote in three of the four colonies. Power is shared by white political parties aligned with British (United Party) and Afrikaner (National Party) cultural traditions. The government is dominated until 1948 by the pro-British United Party; numerous laws are passed that earmark skilled jobs for whites and strip blacks of property rights in agricultural areas.

1912 The South African Native National Congress is formed. Renamed the African National Congress (ANC) in 1923, it will become the leading black nationalist organization in South Africa.

1932 Athol Fugard is born in Middlefield, in the semidesert Karoo region of South Africa. In 1935, he moves to Port Elizabeth, where his mother later runs the boardinghouse that inspires the memories shared by the characters of “Master Harold”...and the Boys. In 1946, his mother invests in the café that becomes the play’s setting.

1948 The National Party wins a majority in parliament, promising to counter the “black threat” with apartheid (“apartness”) laws. Over the next four years dozens of laws are passed requiring racial registration; prohibiting interracial sexual contact; segregating public facilities, transportation, and parks; abolishing black village councils; and prohibiting black membership in labor unions.

1950 The Suppression of Communism Act is passed, with language so broad that virtually any individual or organization opposed to the National Party can be censored and/or arrested. The Population Registration Act classifies every South African according to race; the Group Areas Act divides cities and towns into segregated residential and business areas, and the government removes thousands of Coloreds and Indians from areas classified for white occupation.

The vast majority of black Africans (two-thirds of the total population) are restricted to rural reservations called “homelands,” with movement into and within white territory restricted by “pass” laws. The government tries to force children, the elderly and disabled, and most women to live on the reservations, where day-to-day survival is impossible without the wages of relatives allowed to work on the outside. Young, single men are allowed to work on white-owned commercial farms, white-controlled mines, or in white-controlled cities, where they receive minimal wages and live in segregated, subeconomic rural settlements or urban townships tightly controlled by whites. By 1983, the government will have brutally ejected more than 3.5 million blacks from the towns and white rural areas.

1952 The Defiance Campaign, a civil disobedience campaign, is launched by the ANC and South African Indian Congress. It lasts more than six months before bloody riots and government action bring it to an end.

1953 The Bantu Education Act restricts curriculum, budget, and salaries in black schools, and openly states that the goal of educating... black students is to prepare them for menial occupations. Blacks are expelled from universities.

1955 The Congress Alliance is formed by the leading anti-apartheid groups. The historic Freedom Charter is drafted by the ANC, specifying that discrimination is to be eliminated and civil rights for all population groups are to be guaranteed.

1956 Fugard, his wife, actress Sheila Meiring, and a small group of friends form an amateur theater company, Circle Players, in Cape Town. The company presents the first Fugard plays to be performed, The Cell and Klaas and the Devil.

1960 In the African township of Sharpeville, at least 67 unarmed African civilians are killed and more than 180 wounded by police, most of the victims are shot in the back as they are running away. Thousands of workers go on strike; the government mobilizes the army, outlaw the ANC and Pan-African Congress, and arrests more than 11,000 people under emergency regulations.

In solidarity with striking drivers, the black population of Port Elizabeth boycotts buses for 40 days, often walking 12 to 28 miles to and from work.

1964 Nelson Mandela, a leader of the ANC, is arrested for treason and sentenced to life in prison.

1972-73 An all-black student organization, led by Steven Biko, launches the Black Consciousness movement. The U.N. General Assembly declares apartheid "a crime against humanity."

1976 Police fire on schoolchildren marching in protest in Soweto. The revolt spreads to other schools as angry students protest the state

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training in its conservatory, and an ongoing dialogue with its community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Managing Director Heather Kitchen, A.C.T. embraces its responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent its relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of A.C.T.'s creative work.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the Geary Theater in 1967. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. During the past three decades, more than 300 A.C.T. productions have been performed to a combined audience of seven million people; today, A.C.T.'s performance, education, and outreach programs annually reach more than 250,000 people in the San Francisco Bay Area. In 1996, A.C.T.'s efforts to develop creative talent for the theater were recognized with the prestigious Jujamcyn Theaters Award.

Today A.C.T. is recognized nationally for its groundbreaking productions of classical works and bold explorations of contemporary playwriting. Since the reopening of the Geary Theater in 1996, A.C.T. has enjoyed a remarkable period of audience expansion and renewed financial stability. The company continues to produce challenging theater in the rich context of symposia, audience discussions, and community interaction.

The conservatory, led by Melissa Smith, now serves 3,000 students every year. It was the first training program in the United States not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a master of fine arts degree. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among the conservatory's distinguished former students. With its commitment to excellence in actor training and to the relationship between training, performance, and audience, the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America's actor training programs, while serving as the creative engine of the company at large.
American Conservatory Theater is deeply grateful for the generous support of the many individuals, corporations, foundations, and government agencies whose contributions make great theater possible.

SAN FRANCISCO BAY GUARDIAN
CORPORATE SPONSOR

One of the first locally owned and operated independent newsweeklies of its kind in the nation, the San Francisco Bay Guardian is still recognized as one of the best. Over the past 35 years, the Guardian has been dedicated to "printing the news and raising hell," and has grown up with two generations of loyal readers around San Francisco Bay. Among the award-winning paper's proudest achievements is its support of the arts, especially of those writers, painters, poets, players, and performers who help make up the soul of the city.

From in-depth news and reviews to the Guardian Outstanding Local Discovery Awards (the Goldies), to sponsoring contests for poetry, photography, and cartooning, the San Francisco Bay Guardian has always nurtured the best, most original artistic output the Bay Area has to offer. Beyond the printed page, the Guardian's dialogue on Bay Area arts and artists continues at sfbg.com, expanding this creative spirit to touch a global community.

“MASTER HAROLD” GOES TO SCHOOL
The A.C.T. ArtReach Program—a series of theater workshops conducted by A.C.T. artists each season in selected Bay Area middle and high schools—is piloting an exciting new initiative in the San Francisco Unified School District in conjunction with the production of “Master Harold”... and the boys. Two San Francisco high schools (Raoul Wallenberg Traditional High School and Ida B. Wells Continuation High School) have been selected to work closely with A.C.T. to incorporate Fugard’s play into the dramatic literature component of their English curricula. Following this season’s launch, one play from A.C.T.’s repertory will be selected for study every year by an increasingly broad range of schools.

Approximately 200 students, including Wallenberg’s entire 10th-grade class, and their teachers will participate in this first phase of the program, which includes attending a student matinee of “Master Harold”... and the boys; working with A.C.T.’s study guide materials; and participating in workshops with A.C.T. artists involved with the production. A.C.T. artists will also work closely with each school’s teachers and administrators beforehand to help them ensure that teaching the play is as fulfilling an experience as possible.

The ArtReach Program has already become a successful component of A.C.T.’s range of youth education initiatives and has proved highly effective in reaching students with no previous exposure to the arts. By the end of the 2000-01 season, ArtReach will have served approximately 1000 students and their teachers, from 18 Bay Area schools. This new project will enable A.C.T. to strengthen its relationship with the city’s schools and make a greater contribution to the community. Like all of A.C.T.’s youth education programs, ArtReach is based on the belief that students’ experience of theater is enriched by understanding the social, historical, and cultural background of plays and playwrights and that insight into technique, design, and acting styles and contact with theater artists will deepen their appreciation for the craft. A.C.T. is also convinced that a participatory approach to learning is the most direct way to capture students’ imaginations and enlist their intelligent responses.

“A.C.T. exists to advance the future of theater as an art form,” says Bruce Williams, A.C.T.’s director of community programs. “We strive to develop future audiences through a commitment to programs that engage audiences of all ages in an ongoing dialogue about the role of theater in the community, and it is important to begin that dialogue as early as possible.”

HELP THE YOUNG CONSERVATORY GET TO LONDON

The A.C.T Young Conservatory will embark on its second theater trip to London in July, and is hoping to fund their much-anticipated journey with financial assistance from the A.C.T. community.

This summer’s journey is a significant milestone in the ongoing expansion of the Young Conservatory’s acclaimed New Plays Program. Young Conservatory Director Craig Slaight initiated the program’s first transatlantic commission and production in 1999, in association with London’s distinguished Royal National Theatre (RNT), by commissioning British playwright Bryony Lavery to write a new play for A.C.T.'s teenage students.

THE GALLERY AT THE GEARY

Find yourself with some extra time before a performance or during intermission? Want to expose yourself to more fine art, but don't make it to San Francisco's art galleries as often as you'd like? Now you need look no further than the Geary Theater itself. A.C.T. invites you to visit the second floor of the theater (just outside the auditorium doors and along the north bank of windows) to view the work of Bay Area artists in a series of rotating exhibits throughout the 2000-01 season.

Currently on view are paintings by landscape and figurative artist Nick Mullahy. Mullahy reflects on his work: "I take my paints and sculptural tools on all my journeys, recording the fleeting moment of my experiences. Whether a moonrise over Sausalito, a sun-struck day in Santa Barbara, thunderstorms in Costa Rica, or an abstract canvas combining elements of all, it comes down to the same theme: a search for balance. The elements of this balance encompass color and composition and emotion and the artist's personal feelings and his or her ideology. If you look, like most things you can find it all."

Each artwork purchase benefits A.C.T. Mullahy is represented locally by Kourosh Ghadishah, (415) 205-0072.

of black education in South Africa. The violence results in 1,000 deaths, and international protests mount.

1977 Biko is arrested and killed in police custody; the Black Consciousness movement is banned. The U.N. Security Council unanimously votes an embargo on the export of arms to South Africa.

1978 Pieter W. Botha becomes prime minister. His administration repeals bans on interracial sex and marriage; desegregates many hotels, restaurants, trains, and buses; removes the reservation of skilled jobs for whites; and repeals the pass laws. A new constitution creates separate parliamentary bodies for Indians and for Coloureds.

1980 Outside pressures against apartheid include divestment campaigns and attempts to ban the import of South African goods and services. Within the country, strikes, boycotts, civil disobedience, sabotage, and the disruption of day-to-day administration are even more devastating. Fugard's mother dies.

1982 "Master Harold"...and the boys premiers at Yale Repertory Theatre and, a few months later, on Broadway.

1984 Long-standing apartheid critic Archbishop Desmond Tutu wins the Nobel Peace Prize.

1986 Violence increases and a nationwide state of emergency is declared. The U.S. Congress (overriding President Reagan's veto) passes the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act, imposing economic sanctions. Police and soldiers patrol African townships in armored vehicles, destroying black squatter camps and detaining, abusing, and killing thousands of Africans.

1988 Conversations begin between National Party leaders and exiled and imprisoned ANC leaders.

1990 Mandela is released after 27 years in prison.

1991 The major apartheid laws are repealed, all political organizations are legalized, and the state of emergency is revoked. Mandela and de Klerk begin negotiations for a new constitutional order.

1993 A new, interim constitution guaranteeing political, social, and economic rights for all the peoples of South Africa is written and approved by all parties involved in the negotiations. Mandela and de Klerk win the Nobel Peace Prize.

1994 South Africa holds its first democratic elections. The ANC receives a majority of the vote, and Mandela becomes president. A new "government of national unity" is formed.

1995 The Truth and Reconciliation Commission is established to investigate acts of violence and discrimination committed by the apartheid regime and by exiled activist groups. Individuals are invited to confess to human rights violations and apply for amnesty. A period of "truth recovery" is to be followed by a policy of reparation and rehabilitation for victims of apartheid.

1996 A new constitution is adopted.

ATHOL FUGARD

South African playwright, actor, and director Athol Fugard is recognized as one of the world's leading theater artists. Born in 1932 in the semidesert Karroo region of South Africa and educated at the University of Cape Town, he traveled as a seaman in the Far East, worked in television in England, America, and Europe, and became actively involved in theater when, after meeting his wife, actress Sheila Meiring, they formed an experimental theater company in Johannesburg. Despite South Africa's harsh censorship laws, he sustained a theater group—the Serpent Players, formed with actor Zakes Mokae—on Port Elizabeth that produced plays that defiantly indicted the policies of apartheid. The troupe, which was forbidden to perform publicly for whites, premiered Fugard's The Blood Knot in 1961. In 1967, the South African government seized Fugard's passport and placed him under surveillance. The harassment did not stop Fugard from collaborating in 1972 with black actor-playwrights John Kani and Winston Ntshona on Sizwe Banzi is Dead and The Island, which were nominated for three Tony Awards. Fugard's celebrated plays also include A Lesson from Aloes, The Road to Mecca, “Master Harold”...and the boys, My Children! My Africa!, Boesman and Lena, Playland, The Captain's Tigress, and Valley Song. His most recent play, Sorrow and rejoicing, will be at the McCarter Theatre Center in May. In addition to his plays, Fugard is the author of Cousins: A Memoir and Notesbooks: 1960–1977 and the screenplays for Boesman and Lena, The Guest, and Marigolds in August. He currently divides his time between the United States and South Africa.

You have described the writing process as involving a progressive unburdening, a shedding of stories that you need to get out, rather than an accumulation. You’re turning 70 soon. Do you still think of writing in those terms?

Oh yes, for me life has been an accumulation and a discharging of appointments. As you live a life, you end up knowing that your life is about keeping appointments with incidents, faces, stories you’ve heard, things you’ve seen. I do finally want to fall into my grave really empty. I don’t want to. You know, stories are no good down there. I would like to have gotten them all out. I would like to have kept all those appointments. And I haven’t got all that much time left. Unfortunately, I think I am going to have my pen in my hand when I get into that box. Oh dear me, there will never be enough time.

Do you still consider “Master Harold” your most personal play?

Let me just think. Yes. It is the most personal, yes. I mean, Fugard is there in disguise, even in drag, in all of these plays in one way or the other. But, I still think of “Master Harold” as a very, very personal play, my most personal statement.
Come to A.C.T. for the most entertaining education in town. A.C.T. offers several ways for you to learn about the season’s productions and to express your views on the issues they raise:

A.C.T. PROLOGUES

These lively half-hour presentations are conducted by each show’s director and are open to the public regardless of whether you are seeing the performance that evening. Prologues, sponsored by the Junior League of San Francisco, are a perfect way to get a look at the creative process behind each production. Prologues are held before the Tuesday preview of every production, at 5:30 p.m., in the Geary Theater. Doors open at 5 p.m.

AUDIENCE EXCHANGES

These informal sessions are a great way to share your feelings and reactions with fellow theatergoers. Audience Exchanges take place in the Geary Theater for 30 minutes immediately after selected performances and are moderated by A.C.T. staff members and artists.

WORDS ON PLAYS

Each entertaining and informative audience handbook contains advance program notes, a synopsis, and additional background information about the play. A subscription for seven handbooks is available by mail to full-season subscribers for $42; limited copies for individual plays are also available for purchase at the Geary Theater Box Office, and at the merchandise stand in the Geary Theater, for $8 each.

Avoid capital gains taxes on the sale of appreciated stock;
Create an income-tax deduction equal to the fair-market value of the stock at the time of transfer; and Generate a more significant gift than if you were just writing a check.

Additional ways to contribute to A.C.T.’s success include:
Cash—one of the most familiar ways to give;
Property—most real estate and personal property qualify as tax-deductible charitable gifts; and Life insurance—the cash value of your current paid-up life insurance policy can benefit A.C.T.

PLANNED GIVING
Many people who could not otherwise contribute to A.C.T. as generously as they would like find they are able to do so with a carefully planned gift. You can make a valuable long-term contribution to great theater by:

Making a bequest to A.C.T.—please let us know if you have included A.C.T. in your will or estate plans; or Creating a life-income charitable trust with A.C.T.—you can gain an immediate and substantial tax deduction, increased annual income paid to you for life, freedom from investment worries, and avoidance of capital gains taxes when you transfer appreciated property to a charitable remainder trust.

Photographs and recordings of A.C.T. performances are strictly forbidden.

Rest rooms are located in the lower lobby, the balcony lobby, and the uppermost lobby.

Wheelchair seating is available on all levels of the Geary Theater. Please call (415) 439-2ACT in advance to notify the house staff of any special needs.
