AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training in its conservatory, and an ongoing dialogue with its community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Managing Director Heather Kitchen, A.C.T. embraces its responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent its relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of A.C.T.'s creative work.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the Geary Theater in 1967. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. During the past three decades, more than 300 A.C.T. productions have been performed to a combined audience of seven million people; today, A.C.T.'s performance, education, and outreach programs annually reach more than 200,000 people in the San Francisco Bay Area. Last year, A.C.T.'s efforts to develop creative talent for the theater were recognized with the prestigious Jujaemya Theater's Award.

Since Perloff's appointment in 1992, A.C.T. has enjoyed continued success with groundbreaking productions of classical works and bold explorations of contemporary playwriting. Guided by Perloff and Kitchen, A.C.T. has expanded its audience base and produced challenging theater in the rich context of symposia, audience discussions, and community interaction.

The conservatory, now serving 1,400 students every year, was the first training program not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a master of fine arts degree. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among the conservatory's distinguished former students. With the 1995 appointment of Melissa Smith as conservatory director, A.C.T. renewed its commitment to excellence in actor training and to the relationship between training, performance, and audience. The A.C.T. Advanced Training Program has moved to the forefront of America's actor training programs, while serving as the creative engine of the company at large.

Remembering Old Times

by Ronald Bryden

In more ways than one, Old Times was a turning point in Harold Pinter’s career. Up to 1971, when Peter Hall first produced the play at the Aldwych Theatre in London, Pinter had been the Dark Stranger of postwar British drama. Reviews of the sixties treat him as a difficult, deliberately obscure puzzle maker, from whose mazes of bleak metaphysical chic audiences have to find their own way out, unaided. People went to see The Birthday Party, The Caretaker, and The Homecoming less as entertainment than as strenuous games of intellectual squash, designed to tone the synapses. The object of this testing mental exercise was to keep up your end of the conversation at Chelsea cocktail parties or small Hampstead dinners, about whether Pinter should be classified as an Absurdist, in the line of Beckett and Ionesco, or as belonging to a new genre called “Comedy of Menace,” along with Joe Orton’s Entertaining Mr. Sloane, Max Frisch’s Fire Raisers, and the early James Bond films. The phrase “black comedy” was also tossed about (Peter Shaffer caught and fastened on it on a funny short play in 1965) which linked itself vaguely in the public mind with the young fashionables who already dressed all in black, with optional biker boots.

All this fretting with names suggests, accurately, that people felt threatened by the Pinter phenomenon and wanted to fix some controlling device on it. Even clamorous admirers seemed defensive in their efforts to explain the plays away with the help of Freud, Jung, and Robert Ardrey’s Territorial Imperative. Critic Kenneth Tynan suggested that the three men in The Caretaker represented the superego, ego, and id, while playwright Terence Rattigan put it to Pinter that, consciously or not, they evoked the Holy Trinity of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. I was one of a number of theater folk asked by a publisher to comment on a bulky typescript by a lady who claimed to have seen The Homecoming more than 20 times and to have plucked out the heart of its mystery. The cause of the publisher’s interest was a brief note by Pinter, either to the writer or some friend who’d shown him her work, congratulating her on recognizing that his play was about the freedom of women, but demurring gently from her conclusion that his character Ruth, faculty wife and former call girl, was intended as an analogue of the Virgin Mary.

The best early Pinter story was the one about the woman who wrote him the following letter:

Dear Sir,

I would be obliged if you would kindly explain to me the meaning of your play The Birthday Party. These are the points I do not understand: 1. Who are the two men? 2. Where did Stanley come from? 3. Were they all supposed to be normal? You will appreciate that without the answers to my questions I cannot fully understand your play.

Pinter replied:

Dear Madam,

I would be obliged if you would kindly explain to me the meaning of your letter. These are the points which I do not understand: 1. Who are you? 2. Where do you come from? 3. Are you supposed to be normal? You will appreciate that without the answers to these questions I cannot fully understand your letter.

The publication of this story in Martin Esslin’s book The Perplexed Wound in 1970 did much to make Pinter seem less dark and strange. So did the fact that, throughout the sixties, British television broadcast an increasing number of television plays written in obedience to those first laws of televised drama laid down in New York in the fifties: audiences will switch off if you halt the action to explain who your characters are and where they’ve been. Anyone who watched TV even occasionally in the sixties could scarcely avoid the conclusion that Henrik Ibsen must be dead.

Nostalgia for the Postwar London of the Young

So the reception given to Old Times in 1971 was partly the result of audiences growing familiar with the elements of Pinter’s dramaturgy. Nothing that happens before the curtain goes up, or offstage, can be known for certain. Nothing the characters say can be taken as truth. Dialogue is action; characters use words not to convey meaning, but to do things to each other. But neither audience familiarity with the rules of Pinter’s game, nor the gleaming assurance with which it was played by Peter Hall’s original cast—Dorothy Tutin, Colin Blakely, and Pinter’s (first) wife, Vivien Merchant—fully explain the glowing notices the play received, the best of Pinter’s career.

For the first time in a Pinter play, the world evoked offstage did not sound like the ominous landscape of an alien planet. There was no more certainty than ever that what lay beyond the play was as its characters described it, but what they described aroused memories the audience could share. Anna’s description of the time when she shared a London flat with Kate aroused nostalgia, as it was intended to do, for a time most Londoners of Pinter’s age remembered well: Queuing all night, the rain, do you remember? my goodness, the Albert Hall, Covent Garden, what did we eat? to look back, half the night, to do things we loved, we were young then, of course, but what stamina, and to work in the morning, and to a concert, or the opera, or the ballet, that night, you haven’t forgotten?

The references to queuing all night or half the night gave Anna’s vagueness a specific time frame. They called up the postwar years when, food and clothes rationed, consumer goods in short supply, there was little for the British to spend money on but culture. One had to queue all night to see Laurence Olivier, Ralph Richardson, and the Old Vic Company at the New Theatre, or to secure gallery seats for performances when Margot Fonteyn and Robert Helpmann danced with the Sadler’s Wells Ballet at Covent Garden Opera House. Concerts still happened at the Albert Hall because the Festival Hall south of the Thames had not yet been built. It was a time when the young could feel that the old, grey, partly destroyed city belonged particularly to them. The Labour Government that swept into power at the end of the war had promised to build a new Britain whose opportunities would be open to all. As the Empire began to slip away, its capital started to seem a more domestic, familial home to its inheritors.

According to Michael Billington, Pinter’s biographer, the playwright sent a script of the play when it was finished to the actress Dilya Hamlett with a note saying: “This will ring bells.” Miss Hamlett confirmed that it did indeed. She and Pinter had a short but intense affair in the spring and summer of 1950, when he was still a mostly out-of-work actor, some of whose circumstances the play echoes. But what she found most authentic in it was its evocation of that postwar London of the young, still singing Eric Maschwitz’s ballad “These Foolish Things,” excited by the new wave of postwar British films such as Carol Reed’s 1947 Odd Man Out, Powell and Pressburger’s 1948 Red Shoes, and David Lean’s screen versions of Dickens’s Great Expectations and Oliver Twist. It was a time when, if you were young and hopeful, the future looked as if it might fulfill all your hopes: bring to success in Britain’s old, highly civilized democracy the socialist experiment that was evidently going so wrong in Eastern Europe.

AFTER BEYOND POLITICS

In 1971, Anna’s attempt to bring back the bliss of that dawn when to be young was very heaven struck deep, painful chords within British audiences of Pinter’s generation. The promised Utopia had not arrived. Instead the island seemed to be sinking deeper and deeper into economic crisis and class warfare. The smell of what eventually would identify itself as Thatcherism was in the air. With this shipwreck of postwar hopes came the realization that youth had vanished, too. The title of Pinter’s play summed up poignantly the emotion at its heart, which also gripped the hearts of its audiences—the dull shock of recognition that their youth, still so present to them in imagination, had become with the passage of 20 years old times. From this point in his career, his main theme would be time lost.

As usual, Pinter added his additional turn of the screw: How sure could anyone be, anyway, that the past had been as one imagined? Twenty-seven years later still, what seems remarkable about Old Times is the way it can be seen to make its contribution to what now seems the common endeavor of the quarter century of British drama after World War II—to explain to the British that most of what they had been told was their past was a lie. As the 20th century nears its end, it becomes clear that its most important events have been mass refusals to believe—America’s loss of belief in the sixties in the national dream according to Eisenhower, the Soviet empire’s loss of belief in the gospel of Stalin, the Chinese youth’s loss of belief in Mao and his little red book. With these can be placed the postwar British struggle to wake up from the Churchilian dream of the Empire and its finest hour. Like all really great plays, Old Times seems to float above and beyond politics, but nevertheless to articulate in its bones the central idea of its time.
An Interview with Harold Pinter
by Mel Gussow

MG: Did you see Odd Man Out?
HP: Yes.
MG: Do you remember the occasion?
HP: I do, as a matter of fact, but it wasn't alone with one other person in the cinema, and I didn't meet any girl when I came out, and I didn't marry her, and so on and so on. But very likely, very possibly, it was a very hot day when I saw Odd Man Out. What interests me a great deal is the mistiness of the past. There's a section in the play, where Deeley says to...the friend, that they met in this pub 20 years before. Well, the fact is they might have and they might not. If you were asked to remember, you really cannot be sure of whom you met 20 years before. And in what circumstances.

MG: Anna has a key line in the play: "There are some things one remembers even though they may never have happened." Essentially, that's what you're saying....
HP: That's right.

MG: Of course what's going to happen is that, as with The Homecoming, people are going to start playing guessing games: Did they meet? Did they sleep together?
HP: I think it's a waste of time.

MG: From your point of view, the literal fact of a meeting or of a sexual relationship doesn't really matter.

PINTER PLAYS IN JUNE

In conjunction with the mainstage production of Old Times, the A.C.T. Advanced Training Program (ATP) presents a public production of two Pinter one-act plays, The Collection and The Lover, at New Langton Arts. The two Pinter works, which are performed together, are the third public production of A.C.T.'s expanded M.F.A. program. A.C.T. Associate Artist Marco Barricelli (who appeared most recently as the earl of Leicester in Mary Stuart and taught "Acting Shakespeare" to second-year ATP students in February) directs the outstanding young cast of M.F.A. candidates.

"Harold Pinter remade the face of dramatic writing in English," explains ATP Director of Humanities Paul Walsh. "He may well be one of the most important playwrights of the second half of the 20th century. The menacing emotion and playful sexuality of his early plays speak to us today in new ways, providing new vistas on the mysterious landscape of human relationships. Producing these two one-act plays in conjunction with Old Times allows the A.C.T. community to experience the richness of Pinter's vision as it continues to call to us across the decades."

Formerly a two-year certificate program, the ATP was expanded in 1996 (thanks to a generous grant from The James Irvine Foundation) to include a third year of study emphasizing rehearsal and public performance culminating in the award of an M.F.A. A.C.T. inaugurated the expanded program in 1996 with a production of Lynne Alvarez's Reincarnation of James Brown, followed in 1997 by Caryl Churchill's Mouthful of Birds.

The Collection and The Lover are performed June 4–6, 11–14, and 15–20. New Langton Arts is located at 1246 Folsom Street. All performances are open to the public, and tickets are available for $10 ($8 for students, full-time teachers, and seniors with valid ID). For tickets, please call the A.C.T. Box Office at (415) 439-2ACT.

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

On March 15, A.C.T hosted a gathering at New York's Broderud Gallery for New York--based alumni of the Advanced Training Program (ATP) and current second-year ATP students. The students were in town to present their pregraduation audition showcase, performing before an invited audience of agents and casting directors. The evening was a great opportunity for past classmates to catch up with one another and for alumni to meet their newest colleagues as the almost--graduates prepare to embark on their own illustrious careers.

“It was great to see so many familiar faces from the past,” said Maureen McKibben, director of student affairs for A.C.T., “and to see alumni turn out in support of A.C.T.’s newest actors.” McKibben organizes alumni events every year and is always looking for ways to help ATP alumni keep in touch with each other and with A.C.T. “My aim is to create something of a support group for ATP alumni. An up-to-date mailing list will make it possible to keep everyone abreast of developments here at A.C.T. and to notify alumni when one of them appears in a play or film.”

Meanwhile on the West Coast, Los Angeles–based alumni, who have recently formed their own group, gathered for dinner at Yamashiro’s Restaurant on May 3. They are working to find “lost alumni” in the Los Angeles area who have fallen out of touch with each other. A.C.T. alumni who would like a copy of the most recent Alumni Newsletter or want to be added to the mailing list should call McKibben at (415) 439-2466.

Summer Fun Continues in the Young Conservatory

The A.C.T. Young Conservatory is still accepting applications for the second session of summer classes for young people 8 to 18 years old. Courses include acting, directing, voice and speech, physical acting, musical theater, performance workshops, audition, and improvisation. Session II will be held July 20–August 23.

Session II’s Performance Workshop will feature a new play by award-winning playwright Daisy Foote, commissioned especially for A.C.T. as part of the Young Conservatory’s renowned New Plays Program. Foote—author of the plays Living with Mary, The Hand of God, and God’s Pictures, the original screenplay My Name Is O’Hare, and the soon-to-be-filmed Love of Their Life—will be in residence for several weeks working with the cast during the rehearsal process. The Young Conservatory New Plays Program is supported by grants from the LEF Foundation and the Fred Gellert Family Foundation.

For applications to Session II, please call (415) 439-2444.

A.C.T. Granted Good News

A.C.T. received bountiful good news this spring, as foundations and corporations encouraged A.C.T.’s education and outreach efforts with generous financial support.

Longtime A.C.T. supporters Chevron, Wells Fargo, and the William Randolph Hearst Foundation recently renewed their commitment to A.C.T. with substantial grants aimed specifically at A.C.T.’s Youth Theater Programs. Since the company’s inception in 1967, A.C.T. has provided a full complement of programs—which include the ArtReach and Student Matinee (SMAT) programs and the Young Conservatory’s New Plays Program, Tenderloin Outreach Project, and scholarship fund—designed to bring the magic of theater to young Bay Area audiences. All of A.C.T.’s youth education and outreach initiatives stem from the company’s abiding conviction that audience diversification and the development of young theater audiences are the keys to ensuring the future of theater as a viable art form.

The ArtReach program, which sends A.C.T. artists into selected San Francisco schools to conduct theater workshops, was created in 1995 thanks to a previous grant from the William Randolph Hearst Foundation and has since served more than 700 young people. The program is much loved by teachers in the San Francisco Unified School District, many of whose students experience theater for the very first time through SMAT performances and ArtReach workshops.

A.C.T.’s Young Conservatory, which has been an integral part of A.C.T. for 20 years, also remains an extremely popular training program, annually serving more than 2,000 students ages 8–18. Tuition scholarships, supported by the recent grants, make the program available to all young people with interest and commitment, across economic boundaries.

Now in its ninth season, the Young Conservatory’s New Plays Program is a unique project which annually commissions the country’s finest playwrights to create works that explore the world from the perspective of young people. Young Conservatory Director Craig Slaight initiated the program in 1989 with the goal of finding plays that have a youthful perspective on life; the program has since grown into the nation’s most respected forum for the development of new work written expressly for young actors.

The A.C.T. Young Conservatory’s Tenderloin Outreach Project launched its third season of on-site acting classes this year for students in after-school programs in San Francisco’s Tenderloin District. Originally a program offering students who live in the Tenderloin full scholarships to Young Conservatory classes, in 1995 the program began to offer hands-on instruction, taught by Young Conservatory faculty, in the facilities of Tenderloin agencies, making it possible for the program to reach more students by setting the classes on the familiar territory of the students’ own neighborhoods.

A.C.T. also recently received generous grants from BankAmerica Foundation and the Peter J. Owens Trust of The San Francisco Foundation to support community outreach efforts. A.C.T. embarked this season on an extensive outreach effort—spearheaded by interim outreach coordinator Nadine Denise Burton—to diversify the A.C.T. community by making potential new audience members aware of A.C.T.’s work and to facilitate coalition building with other Bay Area organizations. Based on this year’s success attracting audiences to exciting new work like Insurrection: Holding History and Golden Child, in coming months A.C.T. will utilize these two-year grants to hire a full-time community outreach liaison.

This increased emphasis on outreach work exemplifies A.C.T.’s continuing commitment to serving as a community-responsive arts organization. A.C.T.’s audience has become younger and more diverse in recent years, a trend encouraged by the company’s risk-taking productions of new plays. While a commitment to the classic repertoire, the cornerstone of A.C.T.’s original mission, remains a primary emphasis today, A.C.T.’s future is also dedicated to increasing diversity, to nurturing new voices and new forms of dramatic literature, and to keeping alive the dialogue such works engender.
HP: No, it doesn’t. The fact is it’s terribly difficult to define what happened at any time. I think it’s terribly difficult to define what happened yesterday. You know that old Catholic thing, the sin in the head? So much is imagined and that imagining is as true as real.

MG: Does the possibility that the meeting might not have taken place make the relationship less meaningful?

HP: No. The fact that they discuss something that he says took place—even if it did not take place—actually seems to me to recreate the time and the moment vividly in the present, so that it is actually taking place before your very eyes—by the words he is using. By the end of this particular section of the play, they are sharing something in the present.

MG: Which may or may not be based on something that did or did not occur in the past?

HP: Right. [Pause.]

MG: I suppose that one would say that something similar occurred in the past. He may not have known Anna, but he probably knew somebody like Anna.

HP: No question. And he may indeed have known Anna. All he says really is that he met her at a pub, and bought her a drink, and they went to a party, and he looked up her skirt. Well, there is no way of knowing whether that was Anna or not, but it very possibly could have been. I mean, they did live in the same district....

TWO PEOPLE TALKING ABOUT SOMEONE ELSE

MG: Could you trace the genesis of Old Times?

HP: I think I wrote it last winter. Yes, last winter. About a year ago. Well, there’s nothing I can tell you about that because it was just a very odd thing really. It was one of those times when you think you’re never going to write again. I was lying on the sofa [downstairs in his house in Regent’s Park, London] reading the paper and something flashed in my mind. It wasn’t anything to do with the paper.

MG: Something to do with the sofa?

HP: The sofa perhaps, but certainly not the paper. I rushed upstairs to my room. I live in a very tall house. I usually find some difficulty getting to the top. But, like lightning, I was up.

MG: What was the thought?

HP: I think it was the first couple of lines in the play. I don’t know if they were actually the first lines. Two people talking about someone else. But then I really went at it....I wrote the first draft of Old Times so fast [in three days] that I couldn’t bother to give the characters names. I called them A, B, and C. And quite naturally my wife [Vivien Merchant, who played Anna in the first production] had no idea whether they were men or women. She had to come to me halfway through and say, wait a minute, who is male and who is female? Eventually it was obvious, but at certain stages actually there was legitimate room for my wife’s uncertainty....
THE TROUBLE WITH COFFEE CUPS

MG: You never have any problems with props.

HP: I don’t have any tents [like David Storey in The Contractor], anything like that. But there are problems with coffee cups. You’d be surprised the problems you can run into with coffee cups.

MG: In the manuscript of Old Times, there was one page changed. It was all about coffee cups. The change was not of dialogue, but coffee cups, and, I think, brandy glasses.

HP: Absolutely, yes.

MG: What happened?

HP: Well, there was one other change in that. I wrote one new line in rehearsal. It was the one addition before London. The line is: “Yes, I remember.” And that affected all the brandy and the coffee. It came in the middle of brandy and the coffee and affected the whole structure. In this play, the lifting of a coffee cup at the wrong moment can damage the next five minutes. As for the sipping of coffee, that can ruin the act. That change was in London. There was no change in the text here [in New York] at all...I did change a silence to a pause. It was a rewrite. This silence was a pretty long silence. Now it’s a short pause...

BETWEEN A PAUSE AND A SILENCE

MG: You’re very clear about the difference between the pause and the silence. The silence is the end of a movement?

HP: Oh, no. These pauses and silences! I’ve been appalled. Occasionally when I’ve run into groups of actors, normally abroad, they say a silence is obviously longer than a pause. Right O.K., so it is. They’ll say, this is a pause, so we’ll stop. And after the pause we’ll start again. I’m sure this happens all over the place and thank goodness I don’t know anything about it. From my point of view, these are not in any sense a formal kind of arrangement. The pause is a pause because of what has just happened in the minds and guts of the characters. They spring out of the text. They’re not formal conveniences or stresses but part of the body of the action. I’m simply suggesting that if they play it properly they will find that a pause—or whatever the hell it is—is inevitable. And a silence equally means that something has happened to create the impossibility of anyone speaking for a certain amount of time—until they can recover from whatever happened before the silence.

MG: In a sense they stand in for dialogue.

HP: Yes. This is part of the life of the thing. And that’s why it’s quite distressing to find actors stopping just because it says “pause.” I always feel that essentially there is a...cause.

A MATTER OF TIME

MG: [Pinter’s screenplays] Accident and The Go-Between deal with time, as do your last three plays. Is there a correlation? Is the past much more of an artistic concern?

HP: Oh, yes. I think I’m more conscious of a kind of ever-present quality in life.

MG: Is it your age?

HP: It may be. It may be. I certainly feel more and more that the past is not past, that it never was past. It’s present.

MG: What’s future?

HP: I know the future is simply going to be the same thing. It’ll never end. You carry all the states with you until the end.

MG: You’re always the sum of your previous parts?

HP: But those previous parts are alive and present. The only time I can ever be said to live in the present is when I’m engaged in some physical activity. Really do forget.

MG: Like cricket?

HP: Yes, or squash, for instance. The concentration on the present seems to be absolutely total.

MG: You don’t think about past cricket matches?

HP: Not when I’m absolutely engaged.

MG: You don’t feel that when you’re writing a play?

HP: No. When I’m writing a play I don’t know what’s coming in. It’s coming from somewhere. It isn’t the present moment alone, by any means. What it all comes down to is time—your original question. The whole question of time and all its reverberations and possible meanings really does seem to absorb me more and more.

MG: Do you find yourself thinking about your childhood?

HP: No. I seem to have forgotten almost everything about it. If you ask me to tell my childhood stories, I would find it almost impossible. The same thing applies to adolescence. That’s slightly different because one remembers kinds of moods, atmospheres, general states, like grief and happiness and things like that. But it’s very difficult to be more specific. For example, referring in a way to Old Times, if you were to ask me which girl I knew 20 years ago in the month of August, I couldn’t say, I knew a number of girls over a certain period and I really couldn’t tell you which one. Dates are impossible. Not only couldn’t I tell you which girl it was, but I would also not be able to describe what happened between us. One or two images remain. An image of rain, for example, in the street. Or a mirror. I can’t remember so much, but it is not actually forgotten. It exists—because it has not simply gone. I carry it with me. If you really remembered everything you would blow up. You can’t carry the burden. We discard, surely, so much. We have to.

IT ALL HAPPENS

MG: When you write plays, do you want a shred of mystery always to exist? Is that part of the fun—to keep secrets?

HP: No. I honestly do not wilfully keep a secret. I can simply only write the way I can write. There’s no other way I can approach it.

MG: People do like to find enigmas even if they don’t exist. I can see with Old Times people will say, did it happen or didn’t it happen?

HP: I’ll tell you one thing about Old Times. It happens. It all happens. [Silence] ■

JAMES HAIRe (Producing Director) began his career on Broadway with Eva Le Gallienne’s National Repertory Theater. He also stage-managed the Broadway productions of And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little and Georgy (a musical by Carole Bayer Sager), as well as the national tour of Woody Allen’s Don’t Drink the Water. Off Broadway he produced Ibson’s Little Eyolf (directed by Marshall W. Mason) and Shaw’s Arms and the Man. Haire joined A.C.T. in 1971. He and his department were awarded Theater Crafts International’s award for excellence in the theater in 1989, and in 1992 Haire was awarded a lifetime achievement award by the Bay Area Theatre Critics’ Circle.

CRAIG SLAIGHT (Young Conservatory Director) spent ten years in Los Angeles directing television and film before joining A.C.T. in 1988. An award-winning educator, Slaight is a consultant to the Educational Theater Association and the National Foundation for Advancement in the Arts and is a frequent guest speaker and adjudicator throughout the country. He has published eight anthologies for young actors, three of which have been selected by the New York Public Library as “outstanding books for the teenager.” In 1989, he founded the Young Conservatory’s New Plays Program; to date 11 new works by professional playwrights have been developed, nine of which have been published by Smith & Kraus in two volumes of New Plays from A.C.T.’s Young Conservatory.

BRUCE WILLIAMS (Director of Summer Training Congress & Community Programs) has had a 22-year working relationship with A.C.T., where he has taught in the Advanced Training Program (ATP), Summer Training Congress, and Studio A.C.T. (which he also administrates), directed numerous ATP studio productions, and acted in more than 40 mainstage productions. He has also performed on numerous other West Coast stages and has worked extensively in film, television, and voice-over.

PAUL WALSH (Dramaturg & Director of Humanities) has extensive experience as a dramaturg, translator, and adaptor, including many years collaborating with the Minneapolis-based Theatre de la Jeune Lune on such projects as Children of Paradise, Germinial, Don Juan Giovanni, and The Hunchback of Notre Dame. His translation of Strindberg’s Creditor was directed by Carey Perloff at CSC in New York in 1991 and at A.C.T. in 1992. Walsh received a Ph.D. in drama from the University of Toronto and taught theater history and dramatic literature at Southern Methodist University. His critical writings appear in The Production Notebooks, Reinterpreting Brecht, Strindberg's Dramaturgy, Theater Symposium, and Essays in Theater.

MERYL LIND SHAW ( Casting Director) joined the A.C.T. artistic staff in 1993. During the previous 16 years, she stage-managed more than 60 productions throughout the Bay Area, including A.C.T.’s Ronny and the Creditors. She was resident stage manager at Berkeley Repertory Theatre for 12 years and production stage manager at the Berkeley Shakespeare Festival for three seasons. She was active with Actors’ Equity Association for many years and served on the AEA negotiating committee in 1992 and 1993. Other casting projects include the San Francisco production of Picasso at the Lapin Agile and the CD-ROM game Obsidian. Shaw also teaches in the A.C.T. Advanced Training Program.

BAY GUARDIAN

In the fall of 1986, a crusading new publication, the San Francisco Bay Guardian, took center stage in San Francisco at one of the most dramatic times in this country’s history. The Guardian was one of the first locally owned and operated independent newsweeklies of its kind in the nation—and is still recognized as one of the best. Over the past 32 years, the Guardian has been dedicated to "printing the news and raising hell," and has grown up with two generations of loyal readers who live, work, and play around San Francisco. Among the award-winning paper’s proudest achievements is its support of the arts, especially of those writers, painters, poets, players, and performers who help make up the soul of The City.

From in-depth news and reviews to the Guardian Outstanding Local Discovery Awards (the Goldies), to sponsoring contests for poetry, photography, and cartooning, the San Francisco Bay Guardian has always nurtured the best, most original artistic output the Bay Area has to offer. Beyond the printed page, the Guardian’s dialogue on Bay Area arts and artists continues at sfh.com, expanding this creative spirit to touch a global community.

TAKE STOCK IN A.C.T.
There are many creative ways to give to A.C.T. All are tax deductible, but recent increases in stock and mutual fund prices also offer A.C.T. donors a tremendous opportunity to:

Avoid capital gains taxes on the sale of appreciated stock;

Create an income-tax deduction equal to the fair-market value of the stock at the time of transfer; and Generate a more significant gift than if you were just writing a check.

Additional ways to contribute to A.C.T.'s success include:

Cash—one of the most familiar ways to give;

Property—most real estate and personal property qualify as tax-deductible charitable gifts; and Life insurance—the cash value of your current paid-up life insurance policy can benefit A.C.T.

PLANNED GIVING
Many people who could not otherwise contribute to A.C.T. as generously as they would like find they are able to do so with a carefully planned gift. You can make a valuable long-term contribution to great theater by:

Making a bequest to A.C.T.—please let us know if you have included A.C.T. in your will or estate plans; or

Creating a life-income charitable trust with A.C.T.—you can gain an immediate and substantial tax deduction, increased annual income paid to you for life, freedom from investment worries, and avoidance of capital gains taxes when you transfer appreciated property to a charitable remainder trust.
