AUGUST AROUND THE GLOBE

Playwright August Wilson's success story is a familiar one: work in obscurity for a lifetime and then break through with one widely accepted piece of work to become celebrated overnight as the sensation of the season. Wilson added an unexpected but very welcome twist to the usual sequence of events, however, when he followed his 1984 attention-grabbing Ma Rainey's Black Bottom with last season's Fences, a play set in the late '50s about a father's hopes for the future of his son. Ma Rainey brought Wilson deserved recognition, but in turning the uncommonly difficult trick of producing a second play even better than the first, the playwright upgraded his position from "promising newcomer" to "established journeyman." Ma Rainey brought Wilson deserved recognition, but in turning the uncommonly difficult trick of producing a second play even better than the first, the playwright upgraded his position from "promising newcomer" to "established journeyman." The Pulitzer Prize and Tony Award Wilson received for Fences have undoubtedly added weight to the growing belief that he may be the playwright of the 80s.

A third August Wilson play makes its West Coast debut next month at the Old Globe Theatre. Joe Turner’s Come and Gone, with a title that echoes the one fixed to a great O’Neill drama, is set in a turn-of-the-century boarding house whose residents might also be right at home in the shadowy barroom of The Iceman Cometh. YOU CAN BE HAD Rife with sexual innuendo and all kinds of other delightful naughtiness, Diamond Lil is vintage Mae West, among the best vehicles the queen of camp ever appeared in and certainly her crowning achievement as a playwright. (Other efforts, including Sex, Pleasure Man and Constant Sinner, are, sadly, all but forgotten.) It is in Diamond Lil that Mae West, portraying the proprietor of a bowery saloon, attempts to entice a Salvation Army evangelist with the classic crack, "Why don't you come up and see me sometime?"

Mae’s notorious play may now be better remembered for its 1933 film version, She Done Him Wrong, which is said to have saved Paramount Pictures from bankruptcy and inspired a rash of controversy that culminated in a Hearst newspapers editorial demanding, "Isn’t it about time Congress did something about Mae West?" With our easily intimidated legislators still undecided on the issue, it remains for the American Conservatory Theatre to do what it can to tame the wild, wild West. So later this month, Ed Hastings and company will revive Diamond Lil and give the old girl another go-around. This second coming we assume would delight Miss West, who always maintained that it’s better to be looked over than to be overlooked. Previews begin January 27. Plays through March 19. Geary Theatre, 450 Geary Street, (415) 673-6440. San Francisco.

EMIR FOR A DAYS
Kismet, an Arabian musical fantasy on themes by Alexander Borodin, began life 35 years ago as a production of Edwin Lester’s famed Los Angeles Civic Light Opera. Southern Californians (and all other interested parties) will be able to revisit old Baghdad next month when Opera Pacific brings the romantic folk tale to the Orange County Performing Arts Center for 19 enchanted evenings and a number of matinee performances. This is one of those evergreen Broadway shows whose story is best left untold for its simultaneous hokeyness and complexity. Suffice it to say that before every bumble, bangle and bead is accounted for, a wise beggar and his worthy daughter have a series of highly unlikely but engaging adventures. Life and death, love and marriage — all occur in Kismet and all in the course of a single day. And whether in bustling bazaar or moonlit garden, the strains of lovely Borodin melodies sound throughout, welcoming lover and stranger alike to an old-fashioned musical paradise. February 5 through 21. Orange County Performing Arts Center, 600 Town Center Drive, (714) 553-0699. Costa Mesa.

BAYSIDE BALLET

A lot of dance watchers are interested in what the San Francisco Ballet will put onstage during its upcoming 1988 season and many of them live nowhere near the ever-inviting city by the bay. Word of artistic director Helgi Tomasson's achievement in building the company and expanding its repertory has traveled on the backs, so to speak, of its dancers as the troupe has recently made a number of highly acclaimed appearances on tour to East Coast and international destinations. But local audiences still get to see what the San Francisco Ballet has to offer, first, most and (we can't help but hope) best. The 1988 season's offerings range in scale from very grand (a new, full-length Swan Lake brought to you by the company that gave the work its American premiere in 1940) to arrestingly intimate (the memorable pas de deux from Frederick Ashton's exquisite "The Dream"). Attention will be paid such established masters as Balanchine (Ballo della Regina, Duo Concertante and The Four Temperaments), Ashton (La Fille mal gardée and Monotones I & II), Paul Taylor (Sunset) and Jerome Robbins (The Concert) as well as such respectfully regarded, recently credentialed professors of the new classicism as David Bintley (The Sons of Horus), James Kudelka (DREAMS OF HARMONY) and Helgi Tomasson, the company's hero in residence (Ballet d'Isoline). Altogether, a season of great variety and depth that is certain to interest balletomanes in the Bay Area and beyond. January 27 through May 3. War Memorial Opera House, 301 Van Ness Avenue, (415) 861-1177. San Francisco.

SPIRITS OF ANOTHER SORT

Of the nearly 200 operas based on plays by William Shakespeare, it seems to be those drawn from the tragedies that are most firmly ensconced in the standard repertory. All opera lovers are familiar with Verdi's Macbeth and Otello, and Gounod's Roméo et Juliette. Perhaps less well known are lyrical treatments of comedies like Much Ado About Nothing and The Merry Wives of Windsor, even in versions effected by such popular composers as Berlioz and Verdi, respectively.

What about A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, Shakespeare's most playful play? How many have seen that one done as opera? Not too many (and we can even count productions of Purcell's The Fairy Queen, which is very loosely adapted). Along comes the Los Angeles Music Center Opera to give Benjamin Britten's rendering of Midsummer an overdue boost in the ratings. Britten follows Shakespeare's text faithfully, adding only music to a world already teeming with harmonic convergences. The composer's

AT HOME(S) WITH HOCKNEY
David Hockney is a one-man UK/LA Festival, a British-born artist who has for some time lived in Southern California. His work in a remarkable range of mediums seems to happily reflect a sensibility that somehow combines the best of the Old and the New Worlds without misrepresenting either. Marking the opening of the actual UK/LA Festival, David Hockney: A Retrospective will bring together a large sampling of the artist's work in honor of his 50th birthday. This survey of the wonderful portraits, witty swimming pool pictures, perspective-bending polaroid photograph collages and ingeniously conceived projects for the theatre that Hockney has produced over the past quarter century will attest to the versatility, confirm the popularity and celebrate the unique double vision of an artist who is as much at home on Pacific Coast Highway as on Charing Cross Road. February 4 through April 24. Los Angeles County Museum of Art, 5905 Wilshire Boulevard, (213) 857-6111. Los Angeles.

IN THE A.C.T.

News of the American Conservatory Theatre

STAR TIME: Tim Curry, lead in the touring company of "Me and My Girl," recently visited A.C.T. and spent an hour talking to Conservatory students about his life in the theatre.

A.C.T.'s DRAMATURALGICAL WRITE STUFF

The American Conservatory Theatre has added two more staff members in its bid to reorganize. Now on board are Arthur Ballet, Literary Advisor, and Jonathan Marks, Director of Publications.

"With the addition of Arthur and Jonathan, we now have the team in place that can provide A.C.T. patrons with insightful dramatic analyses," Artistic Director Edward Hastings said.

Ballet, editor for volumes 1-13 of "Playwrights for Tomorrow," will be a consultant on repertory selection and on new scripts for the Plays-in-Progress program. A recent Fulbright scholar in Denmark, Ballet was a professor of theatre arts at the University of Minnesota for many years after earning his Ph.D. there. He has served as a consultant with the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, and the Guggenheim Foundation, and from 1979-82 was Theatre Program Director at the National Endowment for the Arts.

Formerly Literary Director and University Liaison Officer of the American Repertory Theatre in Cambridge, Massachusetts, Marks will annotate and edit the house program and A.C.T. Press in addition to working on assorted communications projects for the company. He is the author of many articles for scholarly journals, has lectured widely, and was a member of the dramatic arts faculties at Harvard and Yale. He holds a D.F.A. from Yale University and studied in France on a Fulbright Fellowship.

DONOR SPOTLIGHT: THE KORET FOUNDATION

A.C.T. is pleased to extend its deepest thanks to the Koret Foundation for its recent grant of $25,000 to support A.C.T.'s artistic endeavors.

Designed to promote the wellbeing of the general and Jewish communities of the Bay Area and to assist the people of Israel, the Koret Foundation is one of the fifty largest foundations in the United States. This year the foundation will award more than seven million dollars in grants to alleviate hunger and homelessness and to support youth

Led by chairman Susan Koret, President Tad Taube, and a board of seven distinguished community leaders, the Foundation plays a leadership role in providing "social venture capital" to worthy organizations, and maintains a deep commitment to honoring the memory and values of its founding donors, Joseph and Stephanie Koret.

Like Haskell Harelik, the title character in Mark Harelik's The Immigrant, Joseph Koret left his Russian homeland to seek a better life in America. A native of Odessa, Koret came to America as a young child — and in the course of his lifetime succeeded in personifying the American dream. A.C.T. is delighted to spotlight the generosity of the Koret Foundation.

PIPS PROGRESS

Plays-in-Progress began its season in mid-December with a production of Dana Mathew's The Great Fugue, directed by Christina Yao and featuring four actors from A.C.T.'s distinguished company.

The series will be continued in mid-March with Piano by Anna Deavere Smith, which will be directed by David Maerz. A third play — titled to be announced — will be produced in mid-April.

"We're very pleased with the response to The Great Fugue," says Associate Artistic Director Joy Carlin, "and we're going on to a very different kind of play — a period piece that will feature A.C.T. actress Delores Mitchell and two extraordinary children — ten years old — from our Young Conservatory.

"A large segment of our audience is interested in new, untried work. They want to be in on the ground floor, and that's why they're attracted to Plays-in-Progress."

Piano is a suspense drama of power and intrigue between natives and colonists on a Cuban plantation in 1896. The story is told as it is heard by two gifted children.

It will have eight performances — between March 9 and 18 — at the Playroom, a 49-seat theatre at 450 Geary St., across from the Geary Theatre.

A.C.T.'s LONDON THEATRE TOUR

This year A.C.T.'s annual London Theatre Tour, led by Artistic Director Edward Hastings and sponsored by the Friends of A.C.T., will include eight memorable days in London (May 9-17) plus an optional five-day visit to Paris (May 17-22).

LONDON BRIDGE: The upcoming A.C.T. Theatre Tour will take in such West End shows as Phantom of the Opera, pictured above.

Tour participants can look forward to a vast range of theatre productions encompassing London's West End, the Royal Shakespeare Company, the National Theatre, and British regional theatre. Included as strong possibilities are new plays by Peter Shaffer, Ronald Harwood, and Caryl Churchill, along with the hit London production of Stephen Sondheim's Follies and optional visits to the long-running Les Misérables and Phantom of the Opera. In addition, the travelers will hear the London Symphony Orchestra, talk with leading theatre people, journey to the beautiful city of Bath, visit backstage at a major London theatre, and explore the redeveloped East End, birthplace of colorful Cockney English.

How a luxury car should move you. Lincoln Town Car. Few cars in the world have the ability to overwhelm your senses. This is one of them.

The 1988 Town Car still possesses that kind of emotional power because it still possesses the enduring virtues of this automobile class. Uniminished size. Uncompromised comfort. And an unmistakable road presence that separates it dramatically from the rest of the field.

That kind of distinctiveness alone is enough to move many to Town Car. Yet Town Car has substantial credentials in other areas as well. A 5.0L V-8 engine with sequential multi-port fuel injection. A trunk that can honestly carry the name. Along with lots of luggage.

An available 12-speaker Ford JBL Audio System that can be further enhanced by the addition of a compact digital disc player.

LINCOLN. What a luxury car should be.
The Paris extension will offer visits to the Comédie Française production of A Midsummer Night's Dream, the legendary Folies Bergères (with a much-sought-after backstage tour), and the Paris Opera Ballet in Delibes' Sylvia, choreographed by Nureyev. A fascinating Monet Day with a tour to Giverny, site of his famous paintings, will conclude with a visit to the newly-renovated Orangerie for a look at his greatest masterpieces. Also scheduled are a trip to the Pompidou Centre, a boat trip down the Seine, and visits to the Picasso Museum and the Musée d'Orsay.

Reservations are being accepted now by Tour Arts of San Francisco, (415) 864-8565.

BEFORE AND AFTER

A.C.T. can be more than just a good play. The play's the main event, of course, but A.C.T. also offers programs before and after the play in which audience members can hear about and discuss the evening's offering with artists who are intimately involved with the works or with scholars who can offer a different sort of insight.

Before selected preview performances the Friends of A.C.T. and the Junior League of San Francisco offer Prologues, which are discussions between theatre artists and audience members at a time — not long before opening night — when the final touches are still being applied to the production. They offer an extraordinary opportunity to orient yourself to the production before you see it. All Prologues take place right in the theatre itself, beginning at 5:30, free of charge.

The schedule for the first Prologues of 1988:

January 11 The Immigrant

January 18 The Immigrant (Bill and Gloria Broder, Authors of Remember This Time, an autobiographical novel)

January 25 The Immigrant (Mark Harelik, author of the play, who is also playing the leading role of his own grandfather)

February 8 The Immigrant (Moses intrinsic, professor of urban history and author of Promised City)

February 15 Diamond Lil (Dennis Powers, Associate Artistic Director of A.C.T.)

YOUNG CONSERVATORY UPDATE

The Young Conservatory's second ten-week session will begin on February 8 and last through May 7, with a break from March 28 through April 2.

If you are between the ages of eight and eighteen, and would like to study acting through such courses as Shakespeare, Acting Techniques/Scene Study, Musical Theatre, Improvisation, Vocal Production, Saturday Workshop, and Ensemble and Performance, the Young Conservatory is the place for you.

Each course costs between $250 and $350. You are urged to register by February 1, as enrollments are limited.

Please contact the Young Conservatory at (415) 773-3880, ext. 244.

MIRACLE FLOATING LIGHT BULB

This illusion has been the talk of the magical world. Performer exhibits a standard 100 watt electric light bulb over which he makes a few mysterious passes, and strange as it seems it becomes lighted. Withdrawing the hands the bulb hangs suspended in mid-air still lighted, it floats about the stage, circles the performer's body, tails high overhead or close to the floor. May even be taken into the audience. Honest. You disprove the possibility of any secret support as a solid hoop may be passed over the floated light bulb. Finally the bulb floats towards the performer's hand where it comes to rest. It seems the light goes out. This self-contained apparatus is a masterpiece of mechanical craftsmanship and every performer should have one. A regular feature in Blackstone's show.

To those who regard #1 as a playground, the description "GT" means a car with an engine, drivetrain and suspension that are up to the task of flattening out the hills and straightening out the curves.

Such a car is the Beretta GT, available with all the niceties such as a 2.8-liter fuel injected V-6, 5-speed gearbox, Delco shocks, stabilizer bars front and rear. All wrapped up in a wind-cheating coupe. Just the package for the sporty set, right!

But, what if you're like most of us and need a four-door sedan? Doesn't owning a four-door sedan automatically put you in the dull and boring category? Chevrolet doesn't think so. That's why there is Corsica LT. A four-door sedan with all the elements necessary to make driving anywhere a GT experience. Touring Grand, if you will.

Corsica can be ordered with the same available V-6 2.8-liter motor as the Beretta and a sport suspension system. Everything is there except the sleek coupe body. Instead, you get a sleek 4-door body with a drag coefficient lower than a Ferrari Testarossa.

So, there you have it. A true GT sports coupe and a sedan for grand touring. From your Chevy dealer.

In an extraordinary career studied with high films like Hannah and Her Sisters, Zelig, Manhattan, Sleeper, Love and Death, Bananas, Interiors, A Midsummer Night’s Sex Comedy, The Purple Rose of Cairo, Broadway Danny Rose and the Oscar-winning Annie Hall, the reclusive writer-director-actor has occasionally taken time out to write a play. Brooklyn’s Canarsie section in 1945, just after the end of World War II. Middle-aged Enid Pollack (played at A.C.T. by Joy Carlin) dreams up crackpot business schemes, trying to make ends meet while her philandering husband Max (Joe Vincent) gambles away his paycheck and dodges loan sharks to whom he’s deeply in debt. To make matters worse for Enid, Max has a much younger girlfriend on the side, Betty (Nancy Carlin) with whom he makes vogue plans to escape to Florida and begin a new life.

The Pollacks’ sons only add to Enid’s worries. Their smart-aleck younger boy Steve (Yuri Lane) is a thirteen-year-old whose grades in school are so bad that he even gets an “F” in personal hygiene. His older brother, the shy, stammering sixteen-year-old Paul (Liam O’Brien) retreats from the problems of adolescence and his fear of people into a private dream world where he becomes a world-famous magician. An apparent ray of hope shines into their lives with the arrival of Jerry (Ken Ruta), a small-time talent agent. Enid is sure that Jerry can get Paul booked into night clubs and starts making plans for a big future.

Although Allen has said that The Floating Light Bulb — the title refers to one of Paul’s favorite magic tricks — isn’t really autobiographical, he admits that he was growing up in the Flatbush area of Brooklyn at the same time the play takes place, that his father, like Max, was a waiter, that his childhood wasn’t very happy either, that he hated school as Paul does, and that he practiced magic tricks in his bedroom.

CHILD OF FLATBUSH: Woody Allen

"What's toughest about writing a play," Woody Allen told New York Times reporter John Corry, "is going from nothing to first draft. But once you write a play, the hardest work is done, and you can get a wonderful production in six weeks. When you watch rehearsals for a play and you see something you don't like, you can make corrections. When you make corrections in a movie, you have to call in the actors from all over the world . . ."

In an extraordinary career studied with hit films like Hannah and Her Sisters, Zelig, Manhattan, Sleeper, Love and Death, Bananas, Interiors, A Midsummer Night's Sex Comedy, The Purple Rose of Cairo, Broadway Danny Rose and the Oscar-winning Annie Hall, the reclusive writer-director-actor has occasionally taken time out to write a play. His first was the 1966 hit Broadway comedy about Americans abroad, Don't Drink the Water. He followed it with Brooklyn's Canarsie section in 1945, just another Broadway success in 1969, the popular Play It Again, Sam, in which the typically timid, bumbling Allenesque hero has a vivid fantasy life revolving around a Humphrey Bogart-like guardian angel who advises him on how to succeed with women.

Some twelve years passed before Allen's third and — so far, at least — last play opened at Lincoln Center's Vivian Beaumont Theatre in April 1981, for a limited engagement as part of a subscriptions series. The Floating Light Bulb represented a distinct departure from the first two plays, both of them relatively conventional Broadway comedies, as Allen laced his characteristic comedy with dramatic conflicts to tell the story of a troubled Brooklyn family facing problems both financial and emotional.

The result is a bittersweet comedy that unfolds in a tenement apartment in Brooklyn's Canarsie section in 1945, just after the end of World War II. Middle-aged Enid Pollack (played at A.C.T. by Joy Carlin) dreams up crackpot business schemes, trying to make ends meet while her philandering husband Max (Joe Vincent) gambles away his paycheck and dodges loan sharks to whom he's deeply in debt. To make matters worse for Enid, Max has a much younger girlfriend on the side, Betty (Nancy Carlin) with whom he makes vague plans to escape to Florida and begin a new life.

The Pollacks' sons only add to Enid's worries. Their smart-aleck younger boy Steve (Yuri Lane) is a thirteen-year-old whose grades in school are so bad that he even gets an "F" in personal hygiene. Some critics who reviewed the original production described the play as Allen's comic variation of Tennessee Williams's The Glass Menagerie. Albert Nakas, ACFII director of A.C.T.'s production, is more specific: "It's as if Clifford Odets had written The Glass Menagerie," he says, adding, "and the more I read the play, the less it reminded me of The Glass Menagerie." Yzaguirre feels that "we can all identify with Paul's dreams, with his feelings of being an outsider. I have a lot of very personal feelings about the play. I understood it immediately and felt deeply attached to it. It evoked memories of my own family and my own childhood, and I think it captures archetypal moments of growing up. That kind of thing moves me a lot, so my response to the work is very strong. And we have to keep in mind that the poverty the family lives with is an important element in the story.

"As a title: The Floating Light Bulb suggests something fragile and lovely, something poetic. And the play attempts to get to that poetic level. It's not like Woody Allen's other plays or his movies. But it has wonderful humor. Some of it is very richly funny. And I think it's more deeply felt than anything of his — except maybe Annie Hall."

"It's by far the best of my three plays," Allen told San Francisco Chronicle writer Steven Winn in a telephone interview a year ago, on the eve of the opening of The Floating Light Bulb at A.C.T. Bay Area audiences turned out in droves to see the least known work of a major American writer.

Advance sales were heavy, and by the time the production was halfway through its run at the Geary, virtually all performances were playing to capacity houses. The production wound up being the biggest box-office hit of the 1986-87 season. Because the repertory schedule doesn't allow for extensions of successful shows like The Floating Light Bulb, A.C.T. Artistic Director Edward Hastings decided to bring it back this year for an encore presentation. When he had made sure that the cast and director were available for the revival, the play was scheduled for a special run of 10 performances and one Student Matinee, beginning December 29.

What are Allen's hopes for The Floating Light Bulb? "I can only hope that a certain amount of what I do . . . that some of it will make a contribution to the culture," he says. "This play could have been a short story, but then I got this call from Lincoln Center, and I live in New York, and I thought I'd like to try to make a contribution to the theatre . . . It's a modest little idea. When all is said and done, maybe it will be an entertaining two hours. My fondest wish is that the person buying a ticket has a good time. I really hope so."

Le Parc offers you a great luxury suite even when your budget affords a good hotel room.

At Le Parc, we believe in good business. All 154 luxury suites at Le Parc come equipped with multi-lined telephone systems. Each provides for a comfortable conversation or entertainment center separate from the sleeping area. And, if your in-suite facilties still aren’t sufficient for your company, our conference rooms and multi-lingual staff are there to run things your way.

We also believe in relaxation. That’s where the rooftop tennis court comes in, and the swimming pool, the spa, the gym, the private restaurant/bar and the in-suite gourmet food service.

Good business also dictates a good location. Ours is excellent: a quiet residential street at Melrose and La Cienega, immediately adjacent to Beverly Hills. The recording, movie and design industries are our neighbors and downtown is only 20 minutes away.

Le Parc is a member of The L’Ermitage Hotels. Our flagship Beverly Hills hotel, L’Ermitage is the only Five-Star, Five-Diamond hotel in America. All five L’Ermitage hotels are intimate, luxury, all-suite hotels and share the L’Ermitage standards of quality and service.

Contact your travel agent or call us directly. You’ll find out how comfortable good business can really be.

THE WELL-ATTIRED SINGLE MALT.

When The Los Angeles Times dubbed The Macallan “The Chateau Margaux of Scotch” we were quite flattered. But we were flabbergasted when Gentleman’s Quarterly wrote “If a lover of single malts were, heaven forbid, restricted to one whisky, he might well choose The Macallan.” For what does an American magazine note about sartorial splendor know about our offering from Craigellachie, Scotland? A great deal, as it seems. Far more than we know about trousers, cravats and such. Although, after perusing a few issues, our own Gavin McPhee is looking a wee bit natty. What with his brogues all a gleamin the ladies are takin a second look.

The Macallan.

SEVERAL months after the 1987 Los Angeles Festival has come to an end, Rudy Perez is still riding his new-energy wave. Right now, for example, the man who has been called "the conscience of local experimental dance" puts his four-member ensemble through an evening of choreographic spinoffs from his festival bill and explains to a crowd at MacArthur Park’s Photography Center the evolution of his art.

Exhilarated, he talks informally about his performance beginnings at Judson Church, New York’s mecca of avant-gardism; he talks about his move — lock, stock and leotards — to Los Angeles ten years ago; and the environment he works with (and sometimes even against) in the city of the presumed Angels.

Minutes earlier he appeared with his quartet in a work-in-progress. Was this man on roller skates blind? Wearing opa-que black glasses, he was pulled by the others who attached themselves to him with an industrial cord. And sometimes he led them. Either way, it became an essay in universe-grasping, a theme that dominates Perez’s creative realm.

For a decade, ever since the this minimalist-with-a-message appeared in our midst, he has been expounding his point of view — eloquently and often

Minutes earlier he appeared with his quartet in a work-in-progress. Was this man on roller skates blind? Wearing opaque black glasses, he was pulled by the others who attached themselves to him with an industrial cord. And sometimes he led them. Either way, it became an essay in universe-groping, a theme that dominates Perez’s creative realm.

For a decade, ever since the this minimalist-with-a-message appeared in our midst, he has been expounding his point of view — eloquently and often powerfully. At 58, an age not so unusual for a performance artist (as distinct from, say, a ballet dancer), his best work seems to grow from the deepest places of his experience, like fibres bled through with dye. The endless imaginative resources that he weaves into his performance pieces are unique to him.

On the festival program, for instance, Perez included Countdown, a solo he created 22 years ago. To see it is to be astonished by the theatrical impact a thing of such economical construction can make. Few were familiar with the genre of minimalism then. But those who are quick to denounce all of it as simplistic gimmickery must first witness this piece, an example of choosing a format because it fits the material.

Perez doesn’t like resting on his laurels, however. “Yes, I guess Countdown was important,” he says, waving aside its value and preferring to talk about his being out-of-step with the doctrine of abstract art that prevailed at Judson Church in the ‘60s. “It was a piece they tolerated at the time,” he explains, settling into a neatly nondescript couch in his apartment near the Los Angeles Farmers Market. “Considering its emotional drama, which was very much out of vogue then, I guess I’m lucky it even happened.”

So are audiences now — straining for indelible images in this festival aftermath. Countdown is one: Bathed in an overhead spotlight that separates him from the surrounding darkness, Perez sits on a stool. He listens to a scratchy, old recording of Madeleine Grey singing Canteloube’s Songs of the Auvergne — wistful ballads reaching to long ago and far away.

The smoke from his cigarette curls upwards, suggesting the only motion initially. Then slowly he lifts an arm and the shadows sculpting his face reveal myriad, almost imperceptible grades of expression. Longing, loneliness, nostalgia — it’s impossible to separate one from another — have rarely been characterized so poignantly.

On the basis of works like these, some say that Perez’s most significant gifts are as a soloist, not as a choreographer of ensemble works.

Indeed, the now-reluctant performer can trace the origins of his artistic pursuits as that of a solo dancer. “I didn’t really fit in with the existing milieu,” he says. “For one thing I started late, not setting foot to board as a soloist until age 33. Without the strong technique all the early bloomers had I couldn’t really join them even if that was what I wanted.”

A native New Yorker, Perez grew up in a Puerto Rican ghetto and, at seven, suffered the death of his mother. On the encouragement of a glee club teacher, he auditioned for and won acceptance to the High School of Music and Art. Following graduation he studied dance at night for ten years with Merce Cunningham, Martha Graham and Erick Hawkins while supporting himself with a mundane nine-to-five job. But it was not until he

Following graduation he studied dance at night for ten years with Merce Cunningham, Martha Graham and Erick Hawkins while supporting himself with a mundane nine-to-five job. But it was not until he came to Judson Church that performance opportunities opened up.

Besides Count Down he had such pieces as Highway, in which he does a slow-motion trek to stage front. In the practice attire of someone in training (shorts over sweat pants), he appears as a subscriber to life, carrying his gear in a satchel.

Ahead of him, directly in his path, is a pair of shoes. But he never reaches them. As he begins this spiritually exhausting trek, this effortful journey to land's end, strains of Satie's Trois Gymnopedies can be heard, the sad and languid melody itself a counterpoint to the tape's random street noises, uttered and Friends Seminary — put him further in touch with his expressive sensibilities.

"I find it curious, though," he says, "that because of my limitations ... my insecurity as a dancer ... I was forced to develop myself in reaction to what wasn't comfortable. Maybe, in the process, I found a truer part of my creative self. One I could believe in. When I look back to the energy put into those years in New York, I can hardly recognize the person. Schlepping props around in the cold and snow. Bucking the elitism at Judson (referring to better established practitioners such as Steve Paxton, Lucinda Childs, Yvonne Rainer).

"The more I think about it the more amazing it seems that I made a platform for myself there — regardless of lacking the sophistication of the in-circle (senior Merce Cunningham exponents). Remember, I was just a novice."

But when other kinds of opportunity arose so did Perez's powers of innovation. It was in 1967 that he and Laura Dean were scheduled to share an evening at Judson, each taking half the program. Dean canceled and, on the spot, Perez recruited two other dancers in order to keep the date.

Thus was his first company born. Without planning, certainly without dreaming about it. Since then Perez has enjoyed a sense of community he had not previously known. The loneliness of the long-distance dancer has gradually dissipated. Even though personnel has changed over the years, to his regret, the director/choreographer always seems to make a solid connection to those company members he enlists.

And stimulate their sensibilities. But what Perez envisions in his ensemble works is quite removed from the deeply personalized solos. The dancers act both as reflector of and commentators on the society they are part of — always, however, with the performance artist's trademark: surreal detachment. Whether profanities and fragments of a pop tune. Somehow this lone figure, ostensibly cut off from and yet overwhelmed by his surroundings, evokes extraordinary sympathy. His mission is agonizingly deliberate, his path direct, his vulnerability unrecorded but ineffably known. He is the existential man. In the face of what Perez was able to bring to the performance venue once he arrived there, one can hardly regret his delay. Moreover, the work he did following his full-time job — dance therapy with patients at Bellevue Hospital and creative dance for children at Adelphi University and Friends Seminary — put him further in touch with his expressive sensibilities. “I find it curious, though,” he says, “that because of my limitations . . . my insecurity as a dancer . . . tapping a slightly satiric vein of urban ennui or exploring otherworldly realms, Perez suggests that an observing ego is in charge.

His pieces, many of them redolent with underground chic, are never mere enactments; they also take enough distance from their subjects to make a statement. At the Los Angeles Photography Center his quartet — Linda Hinojos, Jeffrey Grimaldo, Anet Margot Ris and Robert Keane — give Celestial Acrobat's a typically beatific look. In a trance-like adagio they form duets, interconnecting and separating while they gaze outward, their faces suffused with semi-blissful half-smiles.

In order to keep performing and rehearsing on a regular basis — the bottom line for maintaining a company — Perez uses this MacArthur Park venue as a supplement to Academy West (Santa Monica) and Plaza de la Raza (East Los Angeles). While he gets the occasional engagement at UCLA or comparably prestigious platforms, most local appearances take place in these studio settings.

"What we need here," says Perez, "is more high-calibre dance. Two companies (his and Bella Lewitzky's) are not enough for the second-largest city in the country. And, unfortunately, the universities don't help much. They're pretty fixated on imports for their presentations. They don't take it upon themselves to build audiences for local artists and thereby attract more resident companies."

Much as he would like to find himself with an affluent sponsor or a well-funded base, Perez knows now what he's always known: "I've got to make it happen myself. It's never been otherwise. Every lesson I learn spells it out." So far, the results of that ethos haven't been too bad.
