AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER, San Francisco’s Tony Award–winning nonprofit theater, nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training, and an ongoing engagement with our community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Executive Director Ellen Richard, we embrace our responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent our relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of our creative work. Founded by pioneer of the regional theater movement William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season in 1967. Since then, we’ve performed more than 320 productions to a combined audience of more than seven million people, and reach more than 250,000 people through our productions and programs every year.

The beautiful, historic Geary Theater—rising from the rubble of the catastrophic earthquake and fires of 1906 and immediately hailed as the “perfect playhouse”—has been our home since the beginning. When the 1989 Loma Prieta earthquake ripped a gaping hole in the ceiling, destroying the proscenium arch and dumping tons of debris on the first six rows of orchestra seats, the San Francisco community rallied together to raise a record-breaking $30 million to rebuild it. The theater reopened in 1996 with a production of The Tempest directed by Perloff, who took over after A.C.T.’s second artistic director, gentleman artist Ed Hastings, retired in 1992.

Perloff’s 20-season tenure has been marked by groundbreaking productions of classical works and new translations creatively colliding with exceptional contemporary theater; crossdisciplinary performances and international collaborations; the reintroduction of a core acting company; and “locavore” theater—theater made by, for, and about the San Francisco area. Her fierce commitment to audience engagement ushered in a new era of InterACT events and dramaturgical publications, inviting everyone to see what goes on behind the scenes.

Perloff also put A.C.T.’s conservatory and educational programs at the center of our work. A.C.T.’s 45-year-old conservatory, led by Conservatory Director Melissa Smith, serves 3,000 students every year. Our three-year, fully accredited Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America’s actor training programs. Our M.F.A. students often grace our mainstage and perform around the Bay Area as alumni. Other programs include the world-famous Young Conservatory for students ages 8 to 19; Studio A.C.T. for adults; and the Summer Training Congress for enthusiasts from around the world.

A.C.T. also brings the benefits of theater-based arts education to more than 8,000 Bay Area school students each year. Central to our ACTsmart education programs, run by Director of Education Elizabeth Brodersen, is the longstanding Student Matinee (SMAT) program, which since 1968 has brought tens of thousands of young people to A.C.T. performances. We also provide touring Will on Wheels Shakespeare productions, teaching artist residencies, in-school workshops, and in-depth study materials to Bay Area schools and after-school programs.

With our increased presence in the Central Market neighborhood marked by the opening of The Costume Shop theater and the purchase of The Strand Theater across from UN Plaza, A.C.T. is poised to continue its leadership role in securing the future of theater for San Francisco and the nation.

Dear Friends,

Welcome to The Normal Heart and A.C.T.’s 2012–13 season! It is extremely moving to bring Larry Kramer’s landmark play back to the Bay Area, 30 years after its conception in New York. So much has changed, and yet the fight that Larry helped launched in the early ’80s to bring attention, resources, and hope to the scourge of AIDS is still being fought. With incredible precision, humor, and humanity, The Normal Heart traces the lives of a group of men and an intrepid female doctor, who began to navigate the incomprehensible and terrifying disease whose pathologies were bound up in a plethora of stigmas about homosexuality.

We talk a lot today about “citizen politicians” and about people taking the political process back from a bloated government, but what struck me so forcefully upon re-encountering The Normal Heart is the way that Larry and a small group of activists actually did it, launching the fight against AIDS by putting together an organization and a protest against all odds, and refusing to be silenced while so many friends and colleagues were dying. The play reveals the fraught alliances and fissures that any such movement inevitably encounters, and the deeply human behavior engendered by fear, distrust, compassion, and tenacity.

It is a joy to welcome this cast to A.C.T., including the incomparable Patrick Breen in the central role of Ned Weeks, and our own beloved Matt McGrath, star of The Black Rider, as his lover, Felix. We are surrounding the production with numerous discussions, symposia, and other special events, and we look forward to your active participation!

This season marks my 20th anniversary with A.C.T., so naturally I have been feeling very old—indeed, my son, who was born two weeks before the groundbreaking to restore the earthquake-damaged Geary Theater, just left for college. Because theater is such a transient art form, anniversaries are a strange phenomenon. The work itself is evanescent and disappears as the curtain descends—what remains are vivid memories and a million lessons learned.

Interestingly, my first five years at A.C.T. were characterized by diaspora, since the 1989 earthquake took our theater out of commission and forced A.C.T. to perform all over the city. Twenty years later, I have begun to realize what a hidden blessing that was—out of necessity, we learned to be nimble and flexible, and to succeed in whatever performance spaces we could find. This season, A.C.T. will again make its mark all over town: we will be performing here at The Geary, as well as at our 49-seat Costume Shop space (where the edgy new Finnish comedy Happy to Stand premieres in October) and across town in the Drill Court of the historic Armory, where the explosive dance-movement-theater piece Black Watch will be performed in May and June. Meanwhile, we are in the design phase for our exciting new second stage, The Strand Theater, in Central Market, which we are transforming into a beautiful 300-seat venue for a wide range of performances and community activities. There are so many different ways to experience live theater, and at A.C.T. you will be able to try out a wide variety of them!

This season gives us the opportunity to bring back artists whose collaboration we have treasured over the years, such as Olympia Dukakis, David Lang, Chay Yew, Irene Lewis, and Tom Stoppard; to celebrate our brilliant core acting company; and to introduce some of the finest M.F.A. Program actors we have ever had in our conservatory. Here’s to an inspiring year ahead!

Yours,

Love and revenge take center stage in Elektra, which will haunt the A.C.T. mainstage just in time for Halloween. Clocking in at an intense 90 minutes, this new interpretation of the timeless Greek tragedy is a fast-paced thriller—of epic proportions.

After her father is murdered by her mother and her mother's lover, Elektra is consumed by grief and fiercely intent on revenge. As Sophocles' iconic tragedy depicts humanity at its most extreme and basic instincts, Elektra engages the audience as judge and jury—a stark reminder that we are all witnesses to our shared history.

“I can’t wait to bring Greek tragedy back to The Geary and to collaborate with René on this extraordinary role,” says A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff, who will direct the production as part of her 20th-anniversary season at A.C.T. “This is one of Sophocles' greatest plays—an extraordinary exploration of vendetta, of the power and ravages of memory, of the love and terror that exists between fathers and daughters and mothers and sons. It's a thriller, a courtroom drama, a lamentation, and a celebration.”

Originally commissioned and workshopped at A.C.T. in 2009, Timberlake Wertenbaker's exquisite new ACADEMY AWARD WINNER OLYMPIA DUKAKIS joins a company of acclaimed actors in this NORTHERN CALIFORNIA PREMIERE FEATURING RENÉ AUGESEN in the title role.

The sweeping production features original music by Pulitzer Prize–winning composer David Lang, who created music for unforgettable A.C.T. productions of The Difficulty of Crossing a Field, Hecuba, and Mary Stuart. Elektra also marks an A.C.T. homecoming for beloved associate artist (and Academy Award winner) Olympia Dukakis, who reprises her acclaimed role as the Chorus Leader from the L.A. production. Last seen at A.C.T. in Vigil, Dukakis previously appeared here in another Greek classic, Euripides’ Hecuba (also translated by Wertenbaker). Variety praised Dukakis’s performance in Elektra as “a study in the art of acting.”

Dukakis will be joined by an extraordinary cast filled with new and familiar A.C.T. faces, including A.C.T. core acting company member René Augesen, who takes on the title role. The cast also includes A.C.T. favorites Steven Anthony Jones, Caroline Lagerfelt, and Anthony Fusco—as well as three members of the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program class of 2013.
“My grandmother’s time here was a profound experience. The care team made her smile and laugh all the time. When she passed, we were all with her, and the staff and nurses cried with us. This meant a lot to our family. We shared very powerful moments in our lives and I’ll always hold that close to my heart.”

The End
OF BEFORE
Gay New York in the Summer of 1981
by Michael Paller
The summer of 1981 was shaping up to be much like any recent summer for the gay population of New York. The gay newspaper, the New York Native, was full of the usual stories and disputes attending the annual house-opening rituals on Fire Island, the barrier island to which so many gay men and lesbians repaired between Memorial Day and Labor Day. Should one partake of the sun, sand, drugs, dancing, and sexual frenzy for which it was famous? Or should one avoid the sun, sand, drugs, dancing, and sex, since all but the sand could be had conveniently in Manhattan without subjecting oneself to the crowded sauna of the Friday afternoon train?

In mid May, nestled among other news, the Native ran a story about a rare pneumonia, Pneumocystis carinii, that had been found in the lungs of 11 New York men, four of whom were identified as gay. One had died. It was a disease usually seen only among the seriously immune suppressed. A spokesman for the New York Department of Health was quoted as saying that rumors of an exotic new disease hitting the gay community were largely unfounded. The report didn’t cause much of a stir.

The Gay Pride March was coming up at the end of June. A Native columnist wrote, “We who march, we who come out, have at some point said to ourselves, ‘Enough, no more. I will no longer let what other people think force me to pretend to be something other than I am.’” This, of course, referred to sex. Until the 70s, gay sex had been made furtive and shameful by the dominant culture, so now for many gay men, having sex was a significant act of political defiance, just like holding your lover’s hand in the movies or while walking down the street. It was our right not only to feel good about sex, but to have it with whomever, wherever, and whenever the opportunity arose. Which was likely to be often. Indeed, the Centers for Disease Control would soon estimate that the most sexually active might have as many as 2,000 sexual contacts in a lifetime. Thanks to increased opportunities in the back rooms of bars and bookstores, in bathhouses and porn theaters (everywhere but at home in bed, it was pointed out), liberation had come to equal sex on demand. Thousands of gay men and women flocked to New York precisely because of those opportunities to celebrate the difference for which they’d been punished in one way or another all their lives (in San Francisco in 1981, according to Randy Shilts in And the Band Played On, 3,000 men a week were turning up at the Club Baths at 8th and Howard).

Among New York’s gay population in 1981, however, there were a lot of men not having sex with strangers every night. Many went to work in the morning and came home at night and watched television. Or went to the movies or to the opera, or theater, or baseball games. Or they played baseball, or read books, or wrote them. They participated in gay consciousness-raising groups or bowling leagues, or went dancing and came home alone. While it’s true that many of the men who did all these things went out and had sex after, still, in the summer of 1981, the gay “community” was actually many overlapping communities engaged in all manner of activities, not all of which had to do with sex.

“For many gay men, having sex was a significant act of political defiance, just like holding your lover’s hand in the movies.”

Some communities were very smart and literate; among their members were readers or writers for Christopher Street, a magazine with ambitions to be the gay New Yorker. In its pages (published by the same people who owned the Native) that summer you could read a frank, serious interview with a fetishist conducted by the prominent gay literary figure and anthologizer, George Stambolian, and an equally serious opinion piece questioning whether the gay political movement was mature enough to demand and win the kind of specific equal rights laws and regulations that would define a community. In any given issue, the magazine might run essays by Gore Vidal, philosopher Paul Goodman, and composer Ned Rorem; reportage by Randy Shilts; fiction by Edmund White, Felice Picano, and Brad Gooch; and poetry and one-act plays by Tennessee Williams. Surrounding this work were equally varied ads, from the National Gay Rights Lobby, the ACLU, and the Quality Paperback Book Club. Gay guest houses and cruises promoted their services, as did San Francisco’s Brothel Hotel, bars, porno bookstores, video services, and, on many outside back covers, the manufacturers of amyl nitrates, inhalants used to enhance sex. Every issue of the magazine made clear the variety of interests and talents of the gay communities that lived and worked in New York. Even so, the common denominator of the essays, fiction, poetry, and ads was our interest in sex. Since Stonewall, it was the basis of gay identity, constructed by gay people themselves.

Even among the sexually active, not everyone was so sure that all this sex was a good thing. As early as 1977, White had written about how sexual permissiveness had become numb repetition, “as rigidly codified as the old morality.” Andrew Holleran, author of Dancer from the Dance, the novel that for many gay men defined the heady era between Stonewall and the advent of AIDS, would write in 1995, “Before the plague, promiscuity was the sore point of homosexual life. Why—even infectious disease specialist for the Department of Health named Selma Dritz said at a meeting of sexually transmitted disease experts at UC San Francisco, “Too much is being transmitted. We’ve got all these diseases going unchecked. There are so many opportunities for transmission that, if something new gets loose here, we’re going to have hell to pay.”

This was no secret among gay men. In the summer of 1981, Christopher Street ran a cartoon showing two men embracing in a bar. One asks the other, “What do you say you and me pool our viruses?” A month later, alongside a prescient piece about cancer as metaphor by Dr. Lawrence Mass (who would write most of the Native’s early AIDS coverage), another cartoon showed a nurse asking a stereotypical Castro clone, “Now, let’s see . . . would you like your tetracycline in pill or gum form?” STDs were occupational hazards for the sexually active, manageable conditions that still could be the subject of jokes.

Those editions were put together in May and June. In July, the New York Times reported the appearance of a rare cancer, Kaposi’s sarcoma, in 41 gay men. Eight of them had died. Later that month in the Native, Mass detailed the appearance of KS. In August, Kramer appealed for research funds, telling Native readers that 120 gay men were stricken, most in New York, and more than 30 had died.

But the summer was a good one. Some gay writers were thinking ahead to a coming golden age. The writer John Preston published a piece in Christopher Street in which he observed the gay community fostering a sense of “brotherhood,” a bond different and deeper than that between a lover or friend. It suggested a developing sense of family in the gay community, a growing up. “There is no community possible,” he wrote, “among people who have only sex or ideas in common.” He would die in 1994. Before the Gay Pride March in June, the novelist Michael Grumley wrote in the Native about why people marched: “We give each other the strength of combined aspiration, the heft of our numbers, the joy of common purpose. It’s something to share, something to be glad of.” Life, he wrote, was, “better in the sunlight.” He died in 1988.

gay men wished to know—did homosexuals convert liberation into promiscuity?”

It was a difficult conversation to have in gay New York. In 1981, the chance to have sex without guilt or fear was such a release and potent rejection of the oppressive past that anyone who voiced doubts about indulging prodigiously risked being labeled a puritan or a Nazi. If he were gay, then he was a self-loathing, puritanical Nazi. This had been Larry Kramer’s experience with his 1978 novel, Faggots. Many gay New Yorkers were enraged by its satirical depiction of a community obsessed with sex and appearance, where any kind of meaningful love or accomplishment was impossible. For some, the book’s message was, “Put aside destructive pursuits and seek love,” but for others, it was, “Sexual liberation is evil.” Kramer became a hated individual for suggesting there was something else to being gay than having sex.

Warnings about trouble had been coming. In 1980, a gay physician named Dan William had described an epidemic already raging: “The incidence of the disease is terrible, and it will get worse,” he said. He was speaking of the high incidence of parasites among New York gay men. It was one of many sexually transmitted infections that over time weakened their immune systems, making them vulnerable to diseases that otherwise they could fight off. Meanwhile in San Francisco, an
On July 3, 1981, the New York Times printed its now-famous introduction to the AIDS epidemic, “Rare Cancer Seen in 41 Homosexuals.” Writer Larry Kramer read the article, and he was scared. He visited the office of Dr. Alvin Friedman-Kien for information and tests. There, he remembers meeting a man he recognized:

Everything in his expression and posture told me what he’d just been told. He sat down next to me in the waiting room and we nodded to each other and I shook my head softly from side to side in what I hoped would pass for sympathy and understanding. “I don’t have anyone I can tell,” he finally said to me. “I’m afraid to tell my friends, because they won’t understand, and I can’t tell my boss or I’ll lose my job. There isn’t anyone I can talk to.”

Downstairs, Kramer met his close friend Donald Krintzman while they waited for bloodwork. Krintzman told him he had Kaposi’s sarcoma. (He died three months later.) Friedman-Kien warned Kramer that these cases were just the tip of the iceberg. Kramer asked him what he could do to avoid catching it—whatever “it” was. “I know what I’d do if I were a gay man,” Friedman-Kien responded. “I’d stop having sex.”

Two weeks later, Kramer and a small group of friends held an 80-person gathering at his apartment. The event raised an impressive $6,635 for research. Soon after, Kramer wrote his first article about what would become known as AIDS in the New York Native, warning, “The men who have been stricken don’t appear to have done anything that many New York gay men haven’t done at one time or another,” and pleading, “In the past we have often been a divided community; I hope we can all get together on this emergency, undivided, cohesively, and with all the numbers we in so many ways possess.”

But many men didn’t want to hear that their lifestyle was harmful. They’d heard it all before, from a moralistic perspective if not a medical one. A Labor Day fundraiser on Fire Island netted a mere $769.55.

In January 1982, Kramer founded Gay Men’s Health Crisis (GMHC) with his friends Nathan Fain, Dr. Lawrence Mass, Paul Popham, Paul Rapoport, and Edmund White. Popham, a handsome A-lister and former Green Beret (whom Kramer not-so-secretly fancied), was elected president. By October: GMHC had raised more than $150,000 and donated a third of it to research. GMHC had printed two issues of its Newsletter and distributed 300,000 copies of its Health Recommendation Brochure, which included a list of AIDS symptoms gay men should look out for. The emergency hotline had received more than 5,000 calls. GMHC had started a Crisis Intervention Counselors program providing companionship and support to patients immediately after they received an AIDS diagnosis. “It was one of those rare moments in life when one felt completely utilized, useful, with a true reason to be alive,” Kramer remembers.
But GMHC was far from perfect. Kramer and Popham had very different ideas about the style and purpose of the organization, and almost everyone found Kramer’s public rhetoric too incendiary. Kramer wanted GMHC to be a bold advocacy organization that prevented the spread of AIDS and pressured the government and medical community to find a cure. Popham and the board, on the other hand, wanted it to be a quiet social service organization that primarily helped those already infected. These internal struggles came to a head when Kramer printed the ferocious “1,112 and Counting” in the March 14, 1983, edition of the Native. Even with the disclaimer—“My views are not to be attributed to Gay Men’s Health Crisis”—the board of GMHC hated the article and pushed Kramer out of the organization.

“I wanted people to see that gay men in love and gay men suffering . . . are just like everyone else.”

Without GMHC, Kramer turned his energies to writing about his experiences on the frontline of history. His early thinking about what would become The Normal Heart began to take shape when he visited Dachau, Germany, and recognized disturbing similarities between America’s inaction with respect to Jewish victims of the Holocaust and its betrayal of the gay community during the AIDS crisis. He wrote a first, epically long draft of the play in a rented shack on Cape Cod soon after. Once he was satisfied, he submitted it to almost every agent in New York. None of them wanted to represent the notoriously confrontational writer, but Kramer remained undeterred.

Finally, he found an audience in Gail Merrifield Papp, the wife and partner of The Public Theater’s founder, Joseph Papp, and head of the theater’s new play department. She met with Kramer in April 1984, and they collaborated on the script for several months before showing it to her husband, who loved “its howling, its terror, and its kindness.” The Normal Heart opened in New York on April 21, 1985, and became the longest-running hit The Public ever produced, enjoying 294 performances and an almost year-long run. Productions in Los Angeles, London, and major theaters around the country and the world followed.

While grounded in history and incorporating a number of journalistic moments, The Normal Heart was never meant to be only documentary drama. Kramer confesses:

I wrote it to make people cry: AIDS is the saddest thing I’ll ever have to know. I also wrote it to be a love story, in honor of a man I loved who died. I wanted people to see on a stage two men who loved each other. I wanted people to see them kiss. I wanted people to see that gay men in love and gay men suffering and gay men dying are just like everyone else.

Where The Normal Heart Found Its Title

According to scholar Alfred Corn, in his essay in We Must Love One Another Or Die: The Life and Legacies of Larry Kramer, when Larry Kramer was searching for a title for his play about the early years of the AIDS epidemic, he was reminded of William Maxwell’s novel The Folded Leaf, and he wondered where the author had found his title. The source was an early Tennyson poem, “The Lotos-Eaters”—“The folded leaf is woo’d from out the bud”—but Kramer’s friend Richard Howard told him it was from one of W. H. Auden’s best-known poems, “September 1, 1939,” which includes the line “To undo the folded lie.” (Auden’s title refers to the date the Nazis invaded Poland, thereby starting World War II.)

Howard read Auden’s poem in its entirety to the playwright over the phone. Kramer was so taken with it that he borrowed from it not only The Normal Heart’s title but also The Furniture of Home—the original title for his 1993 play, The Destiny of Me, which picks up the life of Ned Weeks eight years after the end of The Normal Heart.

It is Kramer’s wish that the following excerpt from “September 1, 1939” be shared with all audiences of The Normal Heart.

The windiest militant trash
Important Persons shout
Is not so crude as our wish:
What mad Nijinsky wrote
About Diaghilev
Is true of the normal heart;
For the error bred in the bone
Of each woman and each man
Craves what it cannot have,
Not universal love
But to be loved alone.

All I have is a voice
To undo the folded lie,
The romantic lie in the brain
Of the sensual man-in-the-street
And the lie of Authority
Whose buildings grope the sky:
There is no such thing as the State
And no one exists alone;
Hunger allows no choice
To the citizen or the police;
We must love one another or die.

When Artistic Director Carey Perloff arrived in 1991, A.C.T. was a bit of a fixer-upper. In the midst of a recession, the institution was in difficult financial straits. The company’s patriarchs—first Founding General Director Bill Ball and then his successor, Ed Hastings—had left, and Carey, an unknown quantity from New York’s Classic Stage Company, was coming in from outside the closely knit, emotionally distraught artistic family. And, of course, the ceiling of The Geary Theater was still in rubble on the stage and the first six rows of the house, unmoved since the Loma Prieta earthquake of 1989—and it would require a $30 million capital campaign to rebuild A.C.T.’s historic home.

Despite all this, our fearless board of trustees was optimistic. “They were amazing,” Perloff remembers fondly. “I was so impressed by them. They were so smart and so honest, and they said to me, ‘Look, this is an incredible challenge.’ It was a miracle A.C.T. survived the earthquake, but that’s what A.C.T. is: a phoenix.”

A.C.T. is a theater founded by artists for artists. “It was meant to be part of a community by employing a group of artists over the long term to create a challenging, robust, amazing repertoire that would talk up to the audience and give them a real sense of destiny in their own city,” Perloff explains. “The more I dug into A.C.T.’s early days, the more I thought, ‘This place is absolutely in my DNA.’”

Since she arrived, engaging with the community on an intimate and transparent level has been of the utmost importance to Perloff, as she set out to introduce challenging theater that addressed local tastes and issues and seasons that brought classical and contemporary theater into collision with each other. She loves how passionate, fiercely intellectual, and... vocal San Francisco’s audiences are. “Tom Stoppard has always said of our audiences, ‘It is amazing the level of attention they bring.’”

“...It was a miracle A.C.T. survived the earthquake, but that’s what A.C.T. is: a phoenix.”

As the years rolled by, the budget was balanced, the company’s anxieties were soothed, and the theater was rebuilt and reopened. New challenges emerged and were duly conquered, and time has passed quickly. “It’s sort of shocking to me that it’s been 20 years. It doesn’t feel like 20 years, because there were so many huge challenges and issues to think about and solve.” Discovering that the Master of Fine Arts Program was the artistic heartbeat of the theater, Perloff made it her mission to incorporate the country’s most promising student actors into mainstage productions whenever possible. She resurrected the core acting company, committing to keep the area’s best professional actors employed locally. She began driving crossdisciplinary projects and fostering international relationships.

Since her arrival, Perloff has been searching for an appropriate second stage for A.C.T., and we are finally in the process of creating one at The Strand Theater in Central Market. “We already have the Cadillac,” she smiles, referring to the century-old, gloriously gilded Geary Theater. “We should have the Mini. It is really important that we have multiple theater spaces. The thousand-seat-theater experience is magnificent, but it’s not going to be for everybody—or right for every project, especially projects with new writers, actors, and designers.”

When Perloff started programming her 20th season, she was not interested in nostalgia. “It needed to be a declaration of the future,” she declares. “I love it that there’s a lot of new work in our season: Stuck Elevator is unlike anything we’ve ever done, and yet in a funny way it’s not unlike anything we’ve ever done. I’m happy that Dead Metaphor and Black Watch are not only new but also international.”

And yet, there is also a healthy number of reunions in store. “A lot of the people I love most in the theater are going to be back this season. It really means a lot to me that they will be here: Matt McGrath in The Normal Heart; Caroline Lagerfelt and Olympia Dukakis and David Lang and Timberlake Wertenbaker for Elektra; Chay Yew for Stuck Elevator; and, of course, Tom Stoppard for Arcadia. And our core company and all of these wonderful designers. These are the people who have been really important to this theater and to me over all these years, and I chose them very carefully.”

A.C.T. is no stranger to producing theater in alternative venues. In 1989, after the Loma Prieta earthquake damaged The Geary Theater, the company spent the next six years performing in seven different venues around the city. Now, after opening the intimate black-box venue The Costume Shop in Central Market and purchasing The Strand Theater just a block away (opening in 2014), A.C.T. is poised to keep moving its productions out into the San Francisco community.

The timing is right, then, for A.C.T. to take its penultimate production of the 2012–13 season, National Theatre of Scotland’s Black Watch, to a thrilling and unique San Francisco venue. From the beginning, it was clear that this innovative production—which ricochets from a Scottish pub to an armored car in Iraq—demanded a totally nontraditional performance venue. The question was: where?

Created from playwright Gregory Burke’s interviews with soldiers who served with Scotland’s nearly 300-year-old Black Watch regiment in the Iraq War, this hauntingly powerful depiction of military brotherhood splices together exquisitely deployed stagecraft—from choreographed marches and Scottish ballads to searing video news footage—to capture the layered state of being at war.

The staging of Black Watch presents the show as theater-in-the-round, with the spectators in stadium seats on two sides of the action, as if they were in an athletic arena. The innovative theatries of the show are created with more than two miles of cable, 123 lighting lamps, 84 floor sections, and 716 seats—which will all be transported to San Francisco on four 40-foot trucks.

Since the production’s world premiere at Scotland’s Edinburgh Festival in 2006, Black Watch has received acclaim for its tour around the globe, appearing in such unorthodox venues as convention and exhibition centers in Australia and New Zealand; an all-girls school in Belfast, Northern Ireland; the Broadway Armory in Chicago; and the legendary St. Ann’s Warehouse in New York.

In fall 2011, A.C.T. set out in search of a San Francisco space for Black Watch and happened upon the ideal venue. “One day,” says A.C.T. General Manager Don-Scott Cooper, “as I was riding my bike through the Mission, I saw this incredible building, which turned out to be the Armory.”

Cooper was immediately drawn to the building’s long-dormant Drill Court, a raw, cavernous space that was originally intended to house boxing events. “The Drill Court just felt right for theater,” says Cooper. “It’s wide open, with high ceilings, and full of possibilities. It’s also a great way for A.C.T. to connect to the fabulous Mission community.”

Maintained by San Francisco’s Armory Community Center, the Drill Court is located at 333 14th Street (between Mission and Valencia). Completed in 1914, the Armory is a reproduction of a Moorish castle, used as a National Guard facility until 1973. In 1978, the Armory was listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The Armory’s Drill Court spans almost an acre and features a dramatic exposed roof structure.

A.C.T. Artistic Director Carey Perloff saw Black Watch three years ago and has been determined to bring it to A.C.T. audiences ever since. “It is truly a nontraditional theater piece that doesn’t fit into a traditional space,” she says, “and part of the pleasure for our audiences in seeing this incredible show will be experiencing it inside this truly historic San Francisco landmark.”

Black Watch begins a strictly limited run on May 3, 2013. Visit act-sf.org/blackwatch for tickets and more information about the show.
CONSERVATORY AWARDS

By Dan Rubin

In October, A.C.T. will celebrate our world-renowned graduate actor-training program and the careers and contributions of some of our most accomplished alumni and generous supporters at the second annual Conservatory Awards. At an elegant luncheon in the Gold Room of San Francisco’s Fairmont Hotel, we’ll be honoring Master of Fine Arts Program alumni Benjamin Bratt, Anika Noni Rose, and Ryan Rilette, as well as San Francisco philanthropists and longtime A.C.T. loyalists Deedee and Burt McMurtry and The Bernard Osher Foundation, an unparalleled champion of higher education and the arts.

“Benjamin, Anika, and Ryan are leading artists in America whose unique, remarkable careers are a source of inspiration for those of us who’ve trained them and for the next generation of actors to come,” says A.C.T. Conservatory Director Melissa Smith. “Burt and Deedee’s contributions to the Conservatory over many years have changed the face of our programs, and the support of The Bernard Osher Foundation is what enables A.C.T. to present Conservatory productions to the public. To honor these alumni and funders is to recognize a process that has come full circle and to celebrate the synergy that makes A.C.T. such a dynamic institution in which to work and train.”

“I think it’s so important to give people awards and give people recognition before it’s posthumous,” says A.C.T. graduate Anika Noni Rose. “But I never expect to be the person to get the award. It’s very moving to me.” Among her many impressive credits, Rose, who will attend the luncheon with the other honorees, won a 2004 Tony Award for her performance in Caroline, or Change; starred in the film Dreamgirls alongside Beyoncé Knowles, Jennifer Hudson, Jamie Foxx, and Eddie Murphy; and was the voice of the first African American Disney princess—Tiana in The Princess and the Frog. This October, A.C.T. will present her with the Rising Star Award.

“There’s something lovely about the title ‘Rising Star,’” Rose adds, “because it doesn’t imply completion. When somebody comes up to me and says, ‘You made it’ that implies that something is over. I’m still working. I’m still reaching for and moving toward my dream. There are a lot of things I’ve been so blessed to be able to do, but I’m not finished by any stretch of the imagination. I love the fact that this award says, ‘We see your movement. We see where you’ve been, and we see where you’re going.’”

Last season’s inaugural Conservatory Awards honored Master of Fine Arts Program alumni Annette Bening and Elizabeth Banks and longtime Bay Area patrons Mortimer and Frannie Fleishhacker. The event raised $153,700 to benefit A.C.T.’s top-ranked actor training programs.

For more information about the upcoming Conservatory Awards, visit act-sf.org/conservatoryawards or contact Helen Rigby, Associate Director of Development, Conservatory, at 415.439.2469 or hrigby@act-sf.org. Tickets and table sponsorships are available now.

The A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program is at the forefront of America’s actor training programs and is the cornerstone of our conservatory, which also serves adult performers in Studio A.C.T., aspiring actors in the Young Conservatory, and acting enthusiasts in the Summer Training Congress. The conservatory has provided a wealth of talented actors for productions across the Bay Area: over the last two seasons, graduates of the M.F.A. Program have taken on leading roles in productions at Berkeley Repertory Theatre, California Shakespeare Theater, Magic Theatre, Marin Theatre Company, San Jose Stage, Shakespeare Santa Cruz, and Shotgun Players. Alumni and current students also appear in the majority of our mainstage productions.

The Conservatory is the artistic heartbeat of our theater company, and the essence of our training lies in the interplay between our professional and student actors. “The great thing about the school is that it has continued to keep actors at the center of A.C.T.’s work, and it also keeps process at the center of the work, because when you’re working with young actors they’re always in process,” Artistic Director Carey Perloff said recently. “And having 20-somethings in the building all the time keeps all of us honest, because they challenge everything we do, always. I love that.”

For A.C.T.’s year-old education department, efforts to support student learning don’t stop when school lets out. Though most classrooms may have been empty this summer, A.C.T.’s inaugural Back to the Source educator institute brought an eclectic group of 15 schoolteachers and teaching artists back to school for a six-day intensive program in theater arts training. The participants, who came to us from as far away as Oregon, Wyoming, and Maryland, as well as both sides of the San Francisco Bay, included K–12 teachers in subjects as diverse as drama, English, math, and science.

Back to the Source aims to equip educators who use theater in their classrooms with a new bag of instructional techniques, while helping them find inspiration in reconnecting with their deepest artistic selves. During the week, A.C.T. conservatory faculty, professional theater artists, and leaders in arts education guided participants in a wide range of hands-on coursework, allowing these hard-working educators the all-too-rare opportunity to collaborate and connect as peers. From early-morning voice and speech exercises and discussions of theater literature for young actors to devising no-holds-barred performance pieces (under the tutelage of Dan Wolf, founding member of the Bay Area hip-hop/theater collective Felonius), Back to the Source participants were put through the paces as students in order to help them reflect on, and celebrate, what it means to be equal parts teacher and artist.

This year’s institute, funded by a generous grant from The Moca Foundation, also offered participants the opportunity to attend four Bay Area theatrical productions and earn academic credit from A.C.T. and Continuing Education Units through a partnership with San Francisco State University.
“After completing this program, I feel a wonderful sense of connectedness between my work as a performing artist and an educator,” offers one San Francisco public elementary school drama teacher. “I feel engaged and hopeful that established organizations like A.C.T. genuinely care about performing arts education and the positive impact it has on youth.”

Susan Stauter, artistic director of the San Francisco Unified School District, adds, “Those of us who viewed the participants’ culminating showcase left the theater inspired to know that these creative and talented teachers will return to their classrooms to pass on what they have learned to generations of students. Once again, A.C.T. has shown itself to be a tremendous resource for theater education at its best.”

Internationally recognized as the world’s most celebrated ballet dancer of his time, Rudolf Nureyev demanded perfection—from the meticulous footwork and athleticism of his choreography to the delicate details of his costumes. Immerse yourself in a dramatic installation of original costumes and photographs highlighting the spellbinding theatricality of the original dance superstar.
RUDOLF

A LIFE of the original dance superstar. Highlighting the spellbinding theatricality of his costumes.

Rudolf Nureyev, internationally recognized as the world's most celebrated ballet dancer, demanded a life and career that were as spellbinding as his stage presence. Born in central Asia and trained in Russia, Nureyev's talent was recognized at a young age, leading to invitations to the world's most prestigious dance institutions.

Nureyev's career was marked by a series of groundbreaking moments. He was the first Soviet dancer to appear at the Paris Opéra in 1962, breaking down barriers between Eastern and Western ballet. His costumes, like his performances, were as much a part of his legacy as his roles. He was known for his innovative approach to costume design and the way he used them to enhance his performances. Every costume was a canvas for his expression, and he often worked closely with designers to ensure that each piece was a perfect complement to his dance.

A celebration of his life and work will be held on the 150th anniversary of the birth of his mentor, Michael Fokine. The event will be a testament to Nureyev's enduring legacy, with performances, lectures, and exhibitions focused on his life and work, and featuring costumes from his time at the Paris Opéra, as well as works by other designers who were influenced by his innovative approach to costume design.

In memory of Rudolf Nureyev, we celebrate the life of a dancer whose artistry and dedication continue to inspire generations of performers around the world.

Annual Fund donors make annual contributions of $75–$1,999 in support of A.C.T.’s operations and programs. They receive a variety of benefits in thanks for their generous support, including invitations to special events, ticket and merchandise discounts, and opportunities to experience behind-the-scenes tours of the theater.

We are privileged to recognize these donors’ generosity during the July 1, 2011–July 31, 2012, period. Space limitations prevent us from listing all those who have generously supported the Annual Fund. For information about giving to the A.C.T. Annual Fund, please contact Matt Henry at 415.439.2436 or mhenry@act-sf.org.

EVERY DOLLAR YOU GIVE MAKES GREAT THEATER HAPPEN!

Did you know that A.C.T. is a nonprofit organization, and that the price of your ticket covers just 60% of our expenses? Your gift to the Annual Fund helps make up the rest. No matter what the amount, you can play an important role at A.C.T.

As a donor, you’ll receive exciting benefits designed to bring you closer to the work you see onstage. Get an inside look at the making of live theater with a visit to our prop and scene shop or costume shop, a backstage tour, or a technical rehearsal.

To learn more, visit act-sf.org/donate or call 415.439.2436.
Providing a Legacy for A.C.T.

“City National gives me peace of mind.”

I founded my law firm in 1985, and now I have four partners. I look out for the rights of others and City National looks out for me.

As a Preferred Banking client, I bank professionally and personally with City National. They provided credit to secure our law firm’s location and financed my house. I have my personal assets with them, too. They’ve been very good at helping me manage everything.

City National is The way up® for me and my business.
