FROM THE ARTISTIC DIRECTOR

Dear Friends:

This season marks the celebration of many milestones, not the least of which is the approaching turn of the millennium. With this production of The Threepenny Opera, we simultaneously salute the 100th anniversaries of the births of Kurt Weill and Bertolt Brecht, welcome the first third-year class of our acclaimed M.F.A. Program onto the Geary stage, and present to you one of the most remarkable collections of artists A.C.T. has ever assembled.

This project is particularly close to my heart. I grew up listening to my Viennese mother playing recordings of Lotte Lenya singing Weill's music in German, and my sense of musical theater has always been defined by this bittersweet, romantic, cynical, and always surprising piece. Seventy years after its twenty-something authors wrote their hit musical amid a frenzy of inspiration and recrimination, Threepenny continues to exert a profound hold on our collective imagination. Brecht was, above all, a great poet, and the juxtaposition of gritty street life and operatic romanticism that defines The Threepenny Opera helped to revolutionize 20th-century theater.

Brecht would have loved the fact that the A.C.T. season that opens with his Threepenny Opera also includes Christopher Marlowe's great political drama Edward II (which Brecht himself adapted and directed as a young artist), and I think he would have delighted in David Hinson's outrageous new comedy, Wrong Mountain, which questions the possibility of true dramatic art surviving in the "commercial swamp" of Broadway. Ted Dykstra's Twopianos, Four Hands employs two astonishingly versatile performers playing dozens of characters in the quest to achieve greatness as concert pianists in a competitive and chaotic world. Indeed, the desire for money versus the desire for artistic, spiritual, and/or romantic fulfillment is a theme that travels throughout the season; nowhere is this battle more fully realized than in Edith Wharton's brilliant turn-of-the-century novel The House of Mirth, which Giles Havergal has adapted for us and which explores the struggle of beautiful Lily Bart to stay on top of the society to which she aspires without a penny to her name.

It is difficult to foresee what the 21st century will bring, but it is impossible to imagine that it will produce a theatrical mind more fertile than that of Tom Stoppard, who ushers in the new millennium at A.C.T. with his new drama of unrequited passion, The Invention of Love. All of us at A.C.T. are thrilled to be walking into the next century with all of you as our traveling partners, and we look forward to the many adventures ahead of us. Welcome to A.C.T.!

Sincerely,

Carey Perloff
Artistic Director

Setting
The Threepenny Opera takes place in the depths of a large city by a harbor.

You are about to see an opera for beggars. Because this opera is so magnificent only a beggar could have thought it up, and because it still had to be so cheap even beggars could afford it, we call it The Threepenny Opera.

by Michael Feingold

A Q&A in which translator MICHAEL FEINGOLD answers the questions you always meant to ask about The Threepenny Opera.

Is this the same thing as The Beggar's Opera?

No. That was written by the English poet and satirist John Gay in 1728. He set his lyrics to folk tunes ("ballads") and popular songs of the day, inventing a new form that Londoners called "ballad opera," which ultimately led to the creation of the modern musical.

How did Bertolt Brecht and Kurt Weill find out about it?

The Beggar's Opera was the 18th century's biggest hit, but disappeared from the stage during the Victorian era. Then a 1920 London revival, by the director Nigel Playfair, made it a hit all over again. Brecht's secretary, Elisabeth Hauptmann, who translated English literature into German for a living, read the work, liked it, and gave her translation of it to Brecht, suggesting that he adapt it for a modern audience.

Don't some people say that Hauptmann really wrote The Threepenny Opera?

Probably, but it's not true. She just translated the original text. But the imagination that reshaped the play and wrote the great lyrics is discernibly Brecht's. He was like Shakespeare in borrowing freely, from a huge number of sources at once, and the results are Shakespearean in scope. Only Shakespeare didn't live in a time of copyright laws, while Brecht was often challenged by writers he'd ransacked and reworked. For instance, the heirs of a poet named Ammer still get a tiny percentage of the royalties, because Brecht used his translations of François Villon as the basis for two of Macbeth's songs, and Ammer sued.

But Villon was a medieval poet. What does he have to do with the 18th century?

Nothing, but The Threepenny Opera's a 20th-century work, written and premiered in Berlin in 1928. It doesn't really take place in any specific time. The characters use Berlin 1920s slang, but the original costumes were vaguely 1890s, and the story's supposed to take place at the time of Queen Victoria's coronation, which was in 1838. The influences come from all over—besides Gay and Villon, there's Kipling, Fielding, Dickens, Martin Luther, and in the music, Bach, Mozart, Viennese operetta, and Humperdinck. Threepenny's a very rich stew.

I see, Humperdinck?

Engelbert Humperdinck. Not the pop singer—Weill's composition teacher. He wrote one very famous opera, Hansel and Gretel, a line from which Brecht and Weill quoted as a joke in Threepenny's finale. All German children know it.

Will I be able to follow all this?

Don't worry—this isn't a theater history class. Just enjoy the story and the songs.

But isn't the story terribly sordid and unpleasant?

Not at all. The joke is that it's sordid and pleasant. It's a common mistake to think Brecht means in-your-face ugliness; what he really wants is honest, unissent clarity. His famous theory of the "alienation effect"—which he didn't fully evolve, by the way, until after Threepenny's success—doesn't mean that the audience should be repulsed by the experience, but that it should make them see an everyday thing with new eyes, as if they were suddenly distanced from it. That's why so much of Brecht's work depends on lightness and surprise—a poetry of staging to match the poetry of the text.

But wasn't he a Communist?

Yes, but the same way he was a theoretician—not until a few years after he wrote Threepenny. And even then, he was a doubting and recalcitrant Communist, with whose work the party always had problems. When he told the House Un-American Activities Committee that he'd "never, never" been a member of the Communist Party, he was probably telling the truth. And the next day he went home to start a Communist-sponsored theater in East Berlin—via Switzerland, on an Austrian passport.

He doesn't sound very trustworthy.

I didn't say he was trustworthy; I said he was a great poet. Trustworthy poets are usually pretty dull. Brecht is inspired. He loves people—their big paradoxes and their little quirks. In Threepenny, Polly and Lucy are rivals, so Brecht writes a scene where they become friends. Peachum hates Macbeth like poison, so Brecht invents the amazing moment where they meet in the last scene.

What about Weill?

In some ways, I think he was a greater genius than Brecht; certainly he was a perfect match for him artistically. The words intrigue you, but the music grabs you and holds you. Weill's classical gift for structure is immaculate, but so is his popular sense of knowing when to hit you with the surprise, the big throbbing chord, the blue note, the incredible C major tune. The balance of the two elements is what makes him the quintessential 20th-century composer—he’s the ultimate crossover artist, at ease in the grandest opera house, or sitting around the piano in some cheap dive. It’s perfect that 2000 should be both the centennial of his birth and the 50th anniversary of his death—he is the first half of this century, the time when art was breaking down all its barriers and struggling to rethink its relation to the audience.

Isn’t it still doing that?

Yes—and notice how popular Weill’s become again. He always does his job without attitudinizing, so he can be grand without getting grandiose and simple without being mame.

But isn’t music in Brecht’s theater supposed to take an attitude, to comment on the action?

To take an attitude toward the action, yes. You can hear in this score exactly what Weill thinks of Peachum and Macbeth, not to mention what he thinks of poverty, hunger, lust, betrayal, and greed. What he never attitudinizes about is music—the score never says, “How clever I am to be writing this,” or, “Listen to the way I pile up these lush chords.” He just writes the piece and lets it do its own work. When he orchestrates, it’s like conversation—listen to the way the trumpet teases the Peachums when they complain about Polly, and then the way it shouts to Macbeth and Tiger Brown in the “Soldiers’ Song.”

Do you mean the “Army Song”?

Well, that’s what Marc Blitzstein called it in his famous 1954 translation, yes. But in German it’s actually called “Cannon Song,” and the title of the original poem is “Song of the Three Soldiers,” which is meant to suggest Kipling’s Soldiers Three.

But why did you make a new translation?

First, because a Broadway producer paid me a lot of money—a good Brechtian reason. And second, because it was needed.

But Blitzstein’s version ran a long time off Broadway, and so many people are familiar with it.

Granted, but you see, it’s a “version,” and I thought—as many people do—that Americans should have a chance to get closer to what was actually performed in 1928. This isn’t to discredit Blitzstein. He did wonderful work. But he also reassigned songs, sometimes almost randomly; he adjusted the work’s tone to 1954, and we don’t live there anymore; and he worked from a later, talkier version of the script, which Brecht had gone on fiddling with all through the ’30s. Anyway, Brecht in English is like Shake-peare in German: Blitzstein wasn’t the first translator and I won’t be the last.

But you’ve reassigned songs, too. Shouldn’t Jenny sing “Pirate Jenny”?

Well, strictly speaking, in 1928, Brecht and Weill intended Polly to sing it—as entertainment at her own wedding. But the famous recording from that time is by Weill’s wife, Lotte Lenya, who played Jenny in the original production, and she sings it in G. W. Pabst’s 1931 film.

So do you mean Jenny should sing “Pirate Jenny”?

She does in Blitzstein’s version, which was written knowing that Lenya would be singing the role again. And that’s been the standard practice ever since. But my script, like the 1928 script, says Polly sings it.

But which character will sing it in A.C.T.’s production?

As to that, let me just say that Carey Perloff’s an extremely intelligent director, and you can count on her to come up with a good Brechtian surprise.
And when Jenny sings “Pirate Jenny,” what does Polly sing at her wedding?

Well, in the Pabst film, for instance, she sings the “Barbara Song,” which is what she sings in the original to explain the marriage to her parents.

But that’s Lucy’s song.

In Blitzstein, yes. But Brecht and Weill wrote an aria for Lucy, which was cut in rehearsal in 1928 because the actress who could sing it left the cast, and her understudy, who replaced her, couldn’t.

We’ve restored it.

Why is that song called “Barbara Song,” anyway? Who’s Barbara?

You’ll laugh—it’s a medieval term in logic.

Oh, come on.

No, really. It’s how 14th-century philosophy students remembered one sequence in logical thought: If (a) and (a), then (a).

You must be kidding.

Of course, Brecht also named his daughter Barbara. And Shaw’s Major Barbara was one of his favorite plays. And the song is about those “barbaric” feelings you can’t control.

And while we’re talking about titles, why is the show called The Threepenny Opera? Why didn’t they just leave it as The Beggar’s Opera?

They almost did, but they didn’t want people to think it was a literal translation of Gay. Brecht first thought of calling it Gesindel, which means “scum” or “riffraff.” But the producer nixed that. They didn’t find the title till, late in rehearsal, Brecht’s friend, the novelist and playwright Lion Feuchtwanger, dropped by and said, “Why don’t you call it The Threepenny Opera?” Brecht knew a good idea when he heard one.

So I gather.

You’re coming in cynical—I like that. We’ll convert you.

To what?

Sentiment. This is a romantic musical, didn’t you know? It’s all about love, and there’s a happy ending. Everybody gets what they want, with lots of money to go around.

That doesn’t sound much like real life—certainly not as seen by a Communist poet.

I keep telling you, he wasn’t a Communist yet. And as for real life, you don’t need to see that on the stage; it’s all around you. The stage is only a comment on it. Threepenny’s a comment on the many ways people can enjoy themselves under capitalism—as long as they don’t forget the most important thing.

What?

The huge number of other people who, for various economic reasons, aren’t enjoying themselves under capitalism. They outnumber us. It’s easy enough to pretend they’re not there—Die im Dunkeln sieht man nicht—but if they decide to start marching one day, it won’t be so easy anymore.

That sounds more like today than 1928.

Threepenny was written for today—literally. Weill said, “To hell with posterity. I write for today.” That’s why his work is always so fresh. After all, no matter what morning you wake up, it’s always today. Which means it’s always time to see The Threepenny Opera.

Like the Weimar Republic, we haven’t exactly succeeded in solving our economic problems. I made this translation for a Broadway production in 1989, and one of the TV reviewers said, “In this production, the beggars have been updated to be the homeless.” As if they’d all had nice suburban split-levels in 1928 Berlin.

In addition to The Threepenny Opera, Michael Feingold’s translations include five other Brecht-Weill works and Schiller’s Mary Stuart, commissioned and produced by A.C.T. in 1998. Chief theater critic of The Village Voice, he was honored in 1996 with the prestigious George Jean Nathan Award.
HIGH LIFE MEETS LOW LIFE

by Jessica Werner

Ever since the city's Gold Rush dawn, San Francisco has been home to staggering contrasts of excess and iniquity—the legendary Barbary Coast underworld a seamy backdrop to the gilded splendor of City Hall, the city's notorious burlesque joints thriving just steps away from grand theaters and opera houses. Intrigued by the ironic duality of San Francisco's cultural history, director Carey Perloff has created a design for A.C.T.'s Threepenny Opera inspired by early 20th-century San Francisco as seen through our own contemporary lens: a fairy tale setting for Brecht-Weill's most famous collaboration, which critic Hans Keller once described as "the weightiest possible lowbrow opera for highbrows and the most full-blooded highbrow musical for lowbrows."

"I wanted to establish a reality for the operatic characters in Threepenny, within the poetic landscape Brecht created, that is not so remote from our own experience," says Perloff. "Turn-of-the-century San Francisco was a thriving center of grand opera, as well as home to a vital popular tradition of vaudeville, jazz, and ragtime. In reading about the American musical scene of the time, which greatly influenced Weill, I realized that high culture and low life have always coexisted in this city."

A.C.T. Steps Up to Meet Hewlett Foundation Challenge

A.C.T. kicks off its millennial fundraising season with the award of a $300,000 challenge grant from the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation. Awarded to A.C.T. in recognition of the strides the company has made toward fiscal stability under the leadership of A.C.T. Managing Director Heather Kitchen and Artistic Director Carey Perloff, the grant will help to ensure A.C.T.'s continued success into and beyond the new century.

"Challenge grants of this size are few and far between," says Kitchen. "By extending this challenge, the Hewlett Foundation has recognized the dedication and hard work of the A.C.T. community—artists, audience, and staff—over the last several years, while expressing confidence in our future growth. This grant offers A.C.T. a precious opportunity to expand the financial base on which A.C.T.'s artistic ventures depend."

The Hewlett Foundation was established in 1966 by Palo Alto industrialist William R. Hewlett, his late wife, Flora Lamson Hewlett, and their eldest son, Walter B. Hewlett. The foundation's broad purpose is to promote the well-being of humankind by supporting non-profit organizations active in the areas of education, performing arts, population, environment, conflict resolution, family and community development, and U.S.-Latin American relations.

One third of the grant is for operating expenses; the remaining two-thirds is earmarked for elimination of accumulated debt. If A.C.T. can produce an operating surplus of $300,000 by June 30, 2000, we can make every dollar you give count as two! To meet the Hewlett challenge, however, we need your help. Please mail gifts to A.C.T. Hewlett Challenge, 30 Grant Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94108, or call (415) 439-2353 for more information.

A.C.T. Proudly Presents the Master of Fine Arts Program Class of 2000

The multifarious ensemble of beggars, cutthroats, and whores seen in The Threepenny Opera is the first collective mainstage performance venture of the talented third-year students of the A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program (formerly known as the Advanced Training Program). With this production, the graduating class of 2000 takes to the stage for a fast-paced season of intensive rehearsal and public theatrical performance, becoming the first group to complete three years of study in residence at A.C.T. since the program was restructured in 1996.

Previously a two-year course of study, the M.F.A. Program was expanded to include a third year of study culminating in the award of master of fine arts degrees to all qualified candidates. During the 1999–2000 academic year, third-year M.F.A. students will augment their classroom work with practical “on-the-stage” training, which will include four public productions at San Francisco’s Magic Theatre, individual self-devised projects, and in-house cabaret performances, as well as developmental readings and workshops of plays under consideration for the A.C.T. mainstage.

“We have restructured the M.F.A. Program, capitalizing on the vitality of our association with the A.C.T. mainstage, to involve students directly in the artistic life of the entire organization,” says Conservatory Director Melissa Smith. “The third-year M.F.A. curriculum offers students a chance to apply the skills and self-knowledge they have developed during their previous two years of study to the challenge of public performance. We want to give them the opportunity to take the artistic risks necessary to achieve the highest standards of professional theater performance, while benefiting from the guidance of A.C.T.’s outstanding faculty and professional acting company. Performing in a major musical work like The Threepenny Opera, on the Geary stage with distinguished professional artists, is perhaps the most valuable learning experience we can offer them as they embark on acting careers of their own.”

The third-year class will continue its exploration this fall of German drama with public productions of Spring Awakening, by Frank Wedekind, and Pains of Youth, by Ferdinand Bruckner, at the Magic Theatre, located at Fort Mason Center. Spring Awakening, directed by Barbara Damashek (who helmed A.C.T.’s mainstage production of The Cherry Orchard in 1996), and Pains of Youth, directed by Adrian Giurega, will run in repertory November 5–21. Tickets are $5–$10 ($5 for students and seniors); for tickets and more information on A.C.T. Conservatory productions at the Magic Theatre, please call the A.C.T. Box Office at (415) 749-2ACT or visit us online at www.act-sfbay.org.

Why Organic Gardening Isn’t Just a Bunch of Manure.

Organic gardening is a lot more than natural fertilizer. And organic gardens do a lot more than make your yard look pretty. They help make the environment healthier. So let’s dig in and see how you can help.

Composting not only helps produce the bacteria, nutrients and mulch plants need, it also reduces the amount of solid waste your home creates.

Another easy way to help the environment in your garden is to change the tools you use. For instance, instead of using sprinklers, try using soaker hoses. They leak moisture into the soil at slow rates, so water gets absorbed instead of running off. You may also consider using a rake, instead of gas-powered blowers. Use a rake instead of gas-powered blowers.

To conserve water, use soaker hoses instead of sprinklers.

Rakes use no fuel and give you some exercise. Next, think about the types of plants you plant.

Consider

Over 15% of solid waste could be reduced if everyone who gardens composted.

Planting perennials. Perennial beds provide refuge for animals and insects that will eat pests and reduce your need for chemicals. Finally, think about planting a tree in your backyard. Trees keep harmful carbon dioxide from entering the atmosphere and create lots of energy-saving shade.

So you see, when we say organic gardens are a good idea, it’s no bull.

BERTOLT BRECHT (1898–1956)
Born in Augsburg, Bavaria, Brecht was publishing poems in a local newspaper by the age of 16. His first produced play, Drums in the Night, was performed at the Munich Kammerspiele in 1922. In 1924 he moved to Berlin, where he worked as a theater critic and as Max Reinhardt’s assistant and dramaturg at the Deutsches Theater while writing a number of plays. His early works include Baal, In the Jungle of Cities, and Life of Edward II of England (written with Lion Feuchtwanger), but his first real success came with The Threepenny Opera in 1928. He began reading Marx’s Das Kapital in the mid-1920s; the influence of this work is already noticeable in his first collaboration with Kurt Weill, The Rise and Fall of the City of Mahagonny. Marxism did not become a driving force in Brecht’s work, however, until the early 1930s, when he wrote Saint Joan of the Stockyards and a number of short didactic plays.

Brecht was forced to flee Germany in 1933 with his wife, Helene Weigel, and their two children, and after living in Switzerland, Denmark, and Finland he settled in California in 1941, where he remained during the war. During these years, he wrote what are generally considered his most important plays: Mother Courage and Her Children, The Good Woman of Setzuan, The Life of Galileo, and The Caucasian Chalk Circle.

In 1947, having been called before the House Un-American Activities Committee, Brecht left the United States for Switzerland, and in 1949 was asked by the government of East Germany to form a state-financed theater company. He moved to East Berlin and founded the Berliner Ensemble, taking up residence in the Theater am Schiffbauerdamm (where The Threepenny Opera had premiered two decades before), which he ran until his death.

KURT WEILL (1900–50)
Born in Dessau, Weill began his earliest attempts at composition at the age of 10, and by 11 had written his first opera, based on a play by Karl Theodor Körner. He soon became an official accompanist of the Dessau Opera, and by 15 was already employed in the craft of the theater. Weill moved to Berlin in 1918, where he studied under Engelbert Humperdinck. Stiffled by the academic atmosphere, however, Weill left Berlin in 1919 to work as a chorus master in Dessau and as director of the municipal theater in Lüdenscheid. In 1920 he returned to Berlin and devoted himself to composition as a student of Ferruccio Busoni. Weill first became known with the production of two short, satirical, surrealistic operas with texts by Georg Kaiser, The Protagonist and The Czar Has Himself Photographed. He began his famous collaboration with Brecht in 1927 with a Songspiel titled Mahagonny, followed by The Threepenny Opera, Happy End, Man Is Man, the ballet The Seven Deadly Sins, and the radio cantatas The Berlin Requiem and Lindbergh’s Flight.

With the increasing persecution of the Jews and the condemnation of his work as “degenerate” by the Nazis, Weill left Germany in 1933; he settled with his wife, Lotte Lenya (the original Jenny) in the United States in 1935. During his 15 years in the United States, he collaborated on several sophisticated stage musicals, including Johnny Johnson, Knickerbocker Holiday (written with Maxwell Anderson), Lady in the Dark (with Moss Hart and Ira Gershwin), One Touch of Venus (with S. J. Perelman and Ogden Nash), Lost in the Stars (based on Alan Paton’s novel Cry, the Beloved Country), and Street Scene (his “American opera,” written with Langston Hughes), as well as the Old Testament pageant opera The Eternal Road. His instrumental works include choral music, chamber music, and a violin concerto.

We first met Brecht in 1927.... Later, when he came to our apartment for the first time, the landlady took one look at him standing in the door and said to him, “No, no. We can’t give anything today.” She thought that he was a beggar, you know, and closed the door. Kurt heard his voice and called out, “Wait a minute. Just let him in.”

When Brecht and Weill worked together privately, it was a very happy collaboration. Only in public did Brecht become Brecht—a real showoff. Kurt was exactly the opposite, quiet. ... Brecht often had extremely primitive ideas for a song, a few bars of music which he had previously picked out on his guitar. Kurt always took these with a smile, saying, yes, he would try to work them in. Naturally, they were forgotten at once. ... When it was time for very serious work ... the two men would work steadily, with the most enormous respect for each other’s opinions. ... One cannot explain Brecht easily or shove him in a corner by saying his work was just an expression of his communism. I don’t think he took his political life too seriously. What he did take seriously were the human aspects of life. In the last verse of one his ballads he writes, “We who wished to plant the seeds of kindness, Could not ourselves be kind. But you to be born in a time, When man to man is a helper at last, Think of us in the past, With understanding.” He knew that not all good could survive and there were times when we had to be evil. But he believed in what lay ahead.

—Lotte Lenya
“THE TEMPLE OF MUSIC AND MIRTH”

As befits a city whose cultural and political life has often played out on an operatic scale, San Franciscans’ affinity for opera can be traced back to 1851, when the first complete opera to be heard in California, La Sonnambula, was presented to packed houses of forty-niners. Just a year earlier, the city’s first full-length plays (a double bill of The Wife and Charles the Second) had been presented in San Francisco’s first theater, Washington Hall, which later earned a reputation as “the town’s most elegant brothel!” For the next two decades, light opera and musical comedy reigned as the city’s favorite theatrical fare, and new theaters and music halls flourished and multiplied. Those were the days when not only miners, lawyers, horse thieves, sailors, cowboys, and millionaires shot freely through the streets,” wrote New York Times music critic Olin Downes, “but where opera flourished in the land.” Touring companies brought European prima donnas to town on a weekly basis: The Beggar’s Opera was applauded for the first time by San Francisco audiences in 1866. The legendary Tivoli Opera House—an image of which inspired the scenic design of A.C.T.’s Threepenny—was responsible for making music lovers of more San Franciscans than any other institution. Also known as “The Temple of Music and Mirth,” the building opened in 1875 as the Tivoli Gardens, where patrons drank beer and dined at tables to the strains of a ten-piece house orchestra accompanying Tyrolean singers. “There are few persons and few families in San Francisco who have not at some time been counted among the Tivoli’s audiences,” reported the San Francisco Chronicle in 1899.

“The millionaire came in and dropped into a seat beside the laboring man, and did not count his dignity grown less by doing so—a common love of music drawing them both. More perhaps than any other theater in America, the Tivoli made opera a democratic entertainment.”

In 1878, the Tivoli premiered Gilbert and Sullivan’s HMS Pinafore, which seized the civic imagination and ran for an unprecedented 84 nights. A social epicenter of culturally populist San Francisco, the Tivoli offered crowd-pleasing versions of both grand and comic opera at low prices (25–50 cents, including a 10-cent coupon for beer or other refreshments), presenting more than 4,000 consecutive shows between 1880 and 1906. “The old Tivoli was something more than a mere amusement place,” wrote journalist Thomas Numan. “It was the musical life and inspiration of the community.”

After the city condemned the first Tivoli as a firetrap in 1903, a new Tivoli Opera House was resurrected in 1904 on the corner of Eddy and Mason (just two blocks from the site of the future Geary Theater, then known as the Columbia). The Italian soprano Luisa Tetrazzini made her U.S. debut in the Tivoli in 1905—which went down in local history as one of the city’s greatest musical coups—and the new theater thrived until it was destroyed by the earthquake and fire of 1906. (A replica of the Tivoli burning in a dramatization of the 1906 fire can be seen in the 1936 film San Francisco) Rebuilt and reopened in 1913, the Tivoli continued to present opera until its conversion to a movie house soon after.

END OF AN ERA

While researching this production at the California Historical Society, Perloff discovered a photograph of the Tivoli as a post-earthquake ruin. “I thought, This is it!” she recalls. “This is where the bourgeois grand-opera tradition Threepenny parodies and the down-and-dirty music-hall world it celebrates coexisted. I was also fascinated by the fact that, like so many other buildings in San Francisco, the Tivoli went through many incarnations. I imagined a grand theater that was eventually used as a vaudeville house, then a girls, girls, girls’ strip joint, and then a soup kitchen.

“It’s no coincidence that this supposedly underclass play takes place in a gilded, bourgeois theater,” says Perloff. In 1928 The Threepenny Opera premiered at Berlin’s opulent Theater am Schiffsbaudamm; ironically, 25 years later Brecht’s state-financed Berliner Ensemble took up residence in the lavishly traditional Schiffsbaudamm, with its recently restored plush velvet seats and regilded proscenium arch. “That’s the remarkable irony of this play, which parallels the life of A.C.T.’s own Geary Theater,” adds Perloff. “Every night, our actors and audience leave this beautiful building to go out into the Tenderloin, past the homeless and prostitutes who make their homes on the streets of the city. That is our Brechtian landscape. All the contradictions are here.”

“For metropolitan people of our time dance is one of those few things that can lift them up above daily routine. Naturally, dance music achieves a significance that it did not possess in earlier times... [A] certain branch of dance music so completely expresses the spirit of our times that it has even been able to achieve a temporary influence over a certain part of serious art music. The rhythm of our time is jazz.”

TONI REMBE AND ARTHUR ROCK

Sutro in San Francisco, Rembe has been attending A.C.T. productions since the company’s 1967 San Francisco premiere. “Strong artistic organizations are especially important to a city. In fact, they are what makes a city great,” says Rembe. “Theater brings people together. We have a very sophisticated and diverse audience in San Francisco, and Carey Perloff has done an outstanding job of creating seasons that challenge and inspire in their scope and diversity.”

Rembe has served on the boards of numerous organizations, including the Van Loben Sels Foundation, a local grant-making foundation specializing in legal aid, civil rights, and social service issues. She has also served as a member of several corporate boards, including SBC Communications Inc.

Bay Area venture capitalist Arthur Rock (Rembe’s husband) has been securing investments for companies on the forefront of the new-technology industry for more than 40 years. His enterprising foresight paved the way for generations of venture capitalists, who now drive one of the most phenomenal engines of business development in human history.

A founder of Intel in 1968, Rock has also been instrumental in the founding of such leading companies as Scientific Data Systems (which later merged with Xerox Corporation), Teledyne, Inc., Diasonics, and Apple Computer. He served on the Intel board of trustees for 31 years and was chairman from 1970 to 1975. Rock has also served on the boards of Scientific Data Systems, Teledyne, Apple Computer, Argonaut Group, Echelon, and Air Touch Communications.

Rock is also a committed philanthropist, concerned with addressing the fundamental problems of society. He serves as president of the Basic Fund, which provides scholarships for grammar school children to attend private schools of their choice.

Rock was the recipient this year of the University of California’s Lifetime Achievement in Entrepreneurship and Innovation Award. In 1997 he received the Arents Pioneer Medal from Syracuse University. He has been named to the Bay Area Business Council Hall of Fame, California Business Hall of Fame, Junior Achievement Hall of Fame, and American Academy of Achievement. He has also served on the board of directors of the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art and the San Francisco Opera Association.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER nurtures the art of live theater through dynamic productions, intensive actor training in its conservatory, and an ongoing dialogue with its community. Under the leadership of Artistic Director Carey Perloff and Managing Director Heather Kitchen, A.C.T. embraces its responsibility to conserve, renew, and reinvent its relationship to the rich theatrical traditions and literatures that are our collective legacy, while exploring new artistic forms and new communities. A commitment to the highest standards informs every aspect of A.C.T.'s creative work.

Founded in 1965 by William Ball, A.C.T. opened its first San Francisco season at the Geary Theater in 1967. In the 1970s, A.C.T. solidified its national and international reputation, winning a Tony Award for outstanding theater performance and training in 1979. During the past three decades, more than 300 A.C.T. productions have been performed to a combined audience of seven million people; today, A.C.T.'s performance, education, and outreach programs annually reach more than 220,000 people in the San Francisco Bay Area. In 1996, A.C.T.'s efforts to develop creative talent for the theater were recognized with the prestigious Jujamcyn Theaters Award.

Since Perloff’s appointment in 1992, A.C.T. has enjoyed continued success with groundbreaking productions of classical works and bold explorations of contemporary playwriting. Guided by Perloff and Kitchen, who joined the company in 1996, A.C.T. has enjoyed a remarkable period of unprecedented audience expansion and renewed financial stability. The company continues to produce challenging theater in the rich context of symposia, audience discussions, and community interaction.

The conservatory, now serving 1,900 students every year, was the first training program not affiliated with a college or university accredited to award a master of fine arts degree. Danny Glover, Annette Bening, Denzel Washington, and Winona Ryder are among the conservatory’s distinguished former students. With the 1995 appointment of Melissa Smith as conservatory director, A.C.T. revitalized its commitment to excellence in actor training and to the relationship between training, performance, and audience. The A.C.T. Master of Fine Arts Program has moved to the forefront of America’s actor training programs, while serving as the creative engine of the company at large.
American Conservatory Theater is deeply grateful for the generous support of the many individuals, corporations, foundations, and government agencies whose contributions make great theater possible. The list below reflects gifts received between June 1, 1998, and July 16, 1999.

AT THE THEATER
The Geary Theater is located at 415 Geary Street. The auditorium opens 30 minutes before curtain.

A.C.T. Merchandise
Posters, sweatshirts, t-shirts, nightshirts, mugs, note cards, scripts, and Words on Plays are available for purchase in the main lobby and at the Geary Theater Box Office.

Referrals
Bar service is available one hour before the performance in the lower lobby and on the second balcony level. Reservations for refreshments to be served at intermission may also be made, at either bar or in the main lobby, during the hour before performance. Food and drink are not permitted in the auditorium.

Beechers!
If you carry a pager, beeper, cellular phone, or other communicators with alarm, please make sure that it is set to the "off" position while you are in the theater. Or you may leave it and your seat number with the house manager, so you can be notified if you are called.

Perfumes
The chemicals found in perfumes, colognes, and scented after-shave lotions, even in small amounts, can cause severe physical reactions in some individuals. As a courtesy to fellow patrons, please avoid the use of these products when you attend the theater.

Emergency Telephone
Leave your seat location with those who may need to reach you and have them call (415) 439-2396 in an emergency.

Latecomers
A.C.T. performances begin on time. Latecomers will be seated before intermission only if there is an appropriate interval.

Listening Systems
Headsets designed to provide clear, amplified sound anywhere in the auditorium are available free of charge in the lobby before performances. Please turn off your hearing aid when using an A.C.T. headset, as it will react to the sound system and make a disruptive noise. Photographs and recordings of A.C.T. performances are strictly forbidden.

Rest Rooms
Rest rooms are located in the lower lobby, the balcony lobby, and the uppermost lobby.

Wheelchair seating is available on all levels of the Geary Theater. Please call (415) 749-2ACT in advance to notify the house staff of any special needs.

AFFILIATIONS
A.C.T. operates under an agreement between the League of Resident Theaters and Actors’ Equity Association, the union of professional actors and stage managers in the United States.
